THE WAR.

The Prospects of Peace Regarded Brighter than Ever Before.

Lord Lyons Succeeds in Bringing Jules Favre and Bismarck Together.

A Brief Armistice Said to be Already Arranged.

Vigorous Movements of the Prussians Nevertheless Reported.

Several Skirmishes in the Environs of Paris.

A Bush Fight in the Woods at Clamart.

The Result in Favor of the French.

Departure of Fenians from Dublin to Join the French Armies.

Tours Now the Actual Seat of the Government.

NEW PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

Consultation Between Jules Favre and Bismarck—Lord Lyons Conducts the Business—An Armistice Arranged.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—The Observer prints in official type the following statement: "The prospects of peace are now better than at any time since the beginning of the war. Lord LYONS, the British Minister at Paris, conducts negotiations between JULES FAVRE and Count VON BISMARCK. It is said a brief armistice has already been arranged."

THE FEELING IN LONDON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—The prospects of peace look more favorable today. The statement that BISMARCK has consented to receive JULES FAVRE informally, is regarded here as an indication of a disposition of the King, on arriving before the walls of Paris, to relax the vigor of his demands. Lord LYONS deserves all praise for his individual efforts to bring about the interview.

ANOTHER APPEAL FOR PEACE.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—The Economist of this city, today, has a strong article in favor of peace. "The very object of the war," the article says, "was to sustain the principle of German unity against the objections of France. That object is now attained, and mankind should interpose to save Paris, and then agree that no great city shall hereafter be fortified."

LONDON NOTES.

Imperfect Armament of the Paris Fortifications—The Woods at Clamart—Fenian Volunteers for the French.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—The statement I wrote you about the imperfect armament of the fortifications of Paris is confirmed by the evacuation of Vincennes and the removal of the old-style guns to the city.

THE WOODS IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD.

But a small portion of the woods in the neighborhood of Paris have been destroyed. Those at Clamart already afford shelter to the Prussians.

FENIAN VOLUNTEERS FOR THE FRENCH.

A gentleman who arrived from Dublin this morning informs me that considerable numbers of Fenians are leaving there for France, to serve in the armies against the Prussians.

ATTACKS ON CATHOLICS.

I saw a letter from Nismes yesterday, stating that when the Republic was announced in the Cevernes, descendents of the old Huguenots tried to hunt down and shoot the Bishop of Nismes. An American Catholic family in the neighborhood was obliged to take to the woods to save themselves.

PLOT AMONG THE FRENCH AT SEDAN.

There is a report here to-night of the discovery of a plot among the French population at Sedan, to sieze the French guns and mitrailleuses captured on the 1st of September. The town was declared in a state of siege. Two thousand stand of arms were discovered.

ESCAPE OF FRENCH PRISONERS.

A report is received from Rouen of the escape of 10,000 French prisoners. R.

PARIS NOTES.

An Old Military Trick—The Flag to Protect American Citizens—Price of Provisions—A Bonapartist Plot—The Erection of the Guillotine Urged—The Laon Explosion.

[The following appeared in the TIMES of yesterday:]

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—Our correspondent at Paris, writing under date of the 15th, says: "It is evident that the King of Prussia hopes for assistance within the walls of Paris—thus carrying out an old military trick. Within the last few days a great many Uhlans have been captured, all of whom pretend to have lost their horses. Two were taken on Tuesday a great distance from their corps. It looks suspicious that all these prisoners speak the French language perfectly. I fear we shall have another wooden horse affair. It is most imprudent to keep Prussian prisoners in the city when the fight begins."

AMERICANS IN PARIS.

The United States Minister has advised all Americans remaining in Paris during the siege to stay in their apartments, but be sure to keep the American flag flying from their roof or windows. The Americans accordingly are taking the siege coolly, and putting a chip on their shoulders, waiting for some one to knock it off if he dares.

PRICE OF PROVISIONS.

The Journal Officiel publishes a decree this morning fixing the price of butchers' meat; that of the best cuts at twenty-one sous per pound. The Prefect of the Police has issued an order that all the wines and provisions found in the Imperial Palaces shall be distributed to the ambulances.

A BONAPARTIST PLOT.

Many of the old Police force of Paris have been arrested on the charge of being concerned in a Bonapartist plot. The nephew of Ex-Prefect of the Seine, PIETRI, who was recently arrested, is believed to be at the head of the conspiracy.

THE RED REPUBLICANS.

A correspondent of the Globe, writing from Paris, says the Red Republicans are now really more dangerous to the safety of the city than the Prussians themselves. Some of them are already urging the erection of the guillotine.

THE LAON EXPLOSION.

LONDON, Sept. 17—P. M.—The commandant of the Fortress of Laon has been fully exonorated of the charge of blowing up the citadel after its surrender to the Prussians. It has been ascertained that it was done by a guard of the magazine—an Alma veteran, in a state of patriotic exaltation.

MILITARY OPERATIONS.

Prussians on Heights in the Environs of Paris—A Reconnoissance from Paris—Skirmish Near Creteil—A Fight in the Woods—The French Victorious.

LONDON, Sept. 18—10 A. M.—The Prussians advancing on Paris have appeared on the heights of Villeneuve and Brunoy. [In the environs of Paris.]

PRUSSIAN CAVALRY AND ARTILLERY.

LONDON, Sept. 18—Noon.—Prince ALBRECHT, with cavalry and artillery, passed through Provins, on Thursday and Friday, and proceeded to Nangis. [Provins is a small town fifty-six miles south south-east of Paris, and Nangis is thirteen miles west of Provins. It has extensive markets, and supplied Paris with provisions and vegetables.]

A SKIRMISH.

LONDON, Sept. 18—Evening.—On Saturday, Gen. VINOY made a reconnoissance from Paris, and discovered a force of 30,000 Prussians posted at Creteil. A skirmish took place, in which the French lost fifteen killed and thirty wounded. A cannonade followed, lasting two hours. Cannonading has been heard in the directions of forts Ivry and Chirenton. [The first on the south and the other on the south-east of Paris, forming part of the external line of defense.] It is reported that Gen. VON FALKENSTEIN'S command has been added to the Prussian forces approaching Paris.

PARIS, Sept. 18.—There was hard fighting yesterday and today around Paris. A great number of volunteers left here this morning, going northward.

A FIGHT IN THE WOODS.

TOURS, Sept. 18.—It is reported that a French corps of 80,000 men, under Gen. DUCROT occupy the woods of Clamart and Meudon [on the south-west of Paris.] There was a fight yesterday between the Prussians and three regiments of the line, assisted by some battalions of the Mobile Guards and a battery of artillery. The result was favorable to the French, the enemy falling back.

THE SEINE CROSSED.

[The following dispatches appeared in the TIMES of yesterday:]

TOURS, Sept. 17.—It is announced at the office of the French Secretary of the Interior that the Prussians have crossed the Seine with fifty cannon, and that the Prussian cavalry now isolates Soissons from Paris and Tours.

A dispatch from the Sub-Prefect at Mulhouse, announces that the enemy now occupies that town and Cernay, and seem to be seeking a new route to Paris. It is reported that the advance guard of the Prussians has been defeated between Mulhouse and Colmar.

VINCENNES.

TOURS, France, Sept. 17.—The fort at Vincennes was blown up and destroyed yesterday by the French, the position being untenable.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—The Prussians are still numerous near Villeneuve, Dammartin and La Plessis. A force of 3,000 has occupied Villers, Cotterets, and there are 10,000 at Nanteuil. It is still believed the Prussian line of attack will be from the east by way of Vincennes.

THE SIEGE TRAIN STILL DISABLED.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—It is said the Prussian siege train is still fast aground in the Canal de la Marne au Rhin, occasioned by the sudden withdrawal of the water in the Western Division by the French engineers.

RAILROADS CUT AND SEIZED.

LONDON, Sept. 17—4 P. M.—The Northern Railway, leading from Orleans to Paris, has been cut between Ablon and Juvisy, about eight miles south of Paris. At the latter place the Germans had planted a battery. Heavy firing was heard in that direction, and it is thought a battle was in progress. No details have been received. Sharp fighting has occurred at Ris, another small town on the Orleans Railway, where the line had been cut. The railroad to Laon is now entirely in the hands of the Prussians.

TOURS, France, Sept. 17.—The following news is promulgated through the office of the French Secretary of the Interior: All the service of the Northern Railway has been suspended. The Prussians have fired into passing trains at Ablon, and burned the depot there.

AT TOURS.

Arrival of the Corps Diplomatic—The City Now the Actual Seat of Government—Rochefort Counsels Moderation.

TOURS, Sept. 18—Evening.—The Corps Diplomatique arrived here today. The foreign Ministers left Paris, yesterday, in haste, having been informed that a serious attack was to be made.

HENRI ROCHEFORT is one of the strongest supporters of the Government. He uses his immense influence over the people to soothe and quiet the impatient, and counsels moderation. M. THIERS is expected here, (Tours,) on his way to Russia through Switzerland.

The precious articles in the Museum of Natural History here and the books of the Library of the Prefecture have been packed up to be sent away in case the city is menaced by the enemy.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—Advices from Tours, now the actual seat of the French Government, complain of the frequent interruptions of mail and telegraphic intercourse with Paris and England. The Government there receives assurances from every quarter that the people are arming and hastening to places of rendezvous.

TOURS, Sept. 17.—The Liberté, Constitutionel, Gazette de France, and some other journals which have heretofore been printed in PARIS: ITS FORTIFICATIONS AND ENVIRONS.

PARIS AND ITS ENVIRONS.

The Beleaguered City—Its Fortifications and Environs—The Various Approaches to the City.

The above map presents a clear view of the City of Paris, its environs and fortifications, and, what is more important, perhaps, at the present moment, the different approaches to the city, the presumed Prussian line of attack, and the location of some of the French outlying forces.

TOPOGRAPHICAL POSITION OF PARIS.

Before noticing the fortifications of Paris, it is important to obtain some general idea of the topographical position of the city and the chief lines of approach, with reference more particularly to the roads and rivers. So far as the rivers are concerned, their chief importance is in their determining the situation of the towns, and therefore of high roads. The Marne and the Seine are the only rivers of importance in this locality. The Marne, throughout its whole course, the Seine from its source to Montereau, that portion of the plateau of Langres comprised between the sources of these rivers, and the Seine from Montereau to Paris, form a long semi-circular strip of country from thirty-eight to fifty miles in breadth, rather hilly toward the east, and intersected by the Aube, but opening up toward the west in a great, dreary, and naked plateau, only traversed by brooks. In this plateau the separation of the Marne from the Seine is effected by a series of low hills, the chief issues of which are occupied by Villenoxe, Sezanne, Pont St. Prix, and Etoges. To the east of this line the country is flat and uniform, consisting of a heavy, cold, uncultivable soil, with a scanty and poverty-stricken population; to the west of this line we find a strong, fertile clay soil, and a rich and numerous population. All this district is watered by shallow sluggish streams; the Grand Morin and Petit Morin, tributaries of the Marne, and the Yeres, a tributary of the Seine, are the principal ones. They offer no obstacle to the operations of an army, but their valleys contain some very advantageous defensive positions.

CHIEF APPROACHES TO THE CITY.

This district is crossed by four longitudinal roads which are at all times good and practicable. These are: 1. Paris to Strasbourg by Meaux, Chateau Thierry, Epernay, and by Chalons, now skirted by a railway. This was the route taken by BLUCHER'S army in its march on Paris. 2. From Paris to Chalons by Meaux, by Ferté-sous-Jouarre, Montmirail, and Champaubert. This was the route taken by BLUCHER in his first march in 1814, when his army was destroyed by NAPOLEON in the battles of Champaubert, Montmirail, Chateau Thierry and Vauchamps. 3. From Paris to Vitry, by Lagny, Coulommiers, Ferté Gaucher, Sezanne and Fère Champenoise. This was the route taken by the Allies in 1814, in their last march on Paris, when they defeated at Fère Champenoise and Ferté Gaucher the corps of MARMONT and MORTIER. 4. From Paris to Nogent-sur-Seine by Brie Comte Robert, Mormans, Nangis, and Provins. This was the route taken by SCHWARZENBERG'S army in its first march on Paris, when it was beaten by NAPOLEON at Mormans, Nangis, and Montereau. Intersecting these four roads are four cross-roads. 1. From Chalons to Troyes by Arcis. 2. From Epernay to Troyes by Vertus, Fère Champenoise, and Planey. 3. From Epernay to Nogent by Montmirail, Sezanne, and Villenoxe. This was the route taken by NAPOLEON in 1814 to compass the destruction of BLUCHER'S army at the battles of Montmirail, Champaubert and Vauchamps. 4. From Ferté-sous-Jouarre to Melun by Coulommiers and Guignes, partly followed by NAPOLEON when he went to beat SCHWARZENBERG'S army at Mormans, Nangis and Montereau.

From the recent movements of the Prussians and the general direction of their advance it is evident that their lines of approach upon Paris will bring them upon its eastern side. These of the main roads of this approach run in a north-easterly direction; the most northerly through Soissons, on the Aisne; the next more to the south, passing through Meaux, on the Marne, and the more southerly one passing through Chalons. All start from the same point on the old boulevards, and pass through the north-eastern angle of the fortified line, and lie between the forts around St. Denis and the forts of Aubervilliers and Romainville. Having considered the approaches to the city and the general features of its environs, we next consider the city itself and its fortifications.

THE CITY OF PARIS.

The City of Paris, situated between the confluents of the Marne, the Oise, and the Seine, in the midst of a wide plain, is divided into two unequal parts by the river, from 200 feet to 900 feet in breadth, which runs from east to west, forming an arc of a circle. On the right bank of the Seine, the height of which is about eighty feet above the level of the sea, rise the hills of Montmartre, 394 feet in height; of Belleville, 311 feet in height; of Ménilmontant and of Charonne. On the left bank are the heights of Mont Valérien, 495 feet; of St. Cloud, 305 feet; of Sèvres, Meudon and Issy. The northern portion of Paris is the largest. Twenty-one bridges keep up the communications. The form of the city may be compared to an ellipse, somewhat flattened on the right side, the longer axis of which is about nine miles. According to the census of 1866, Paris has 1,825,274 inhabitants, and about 90,000 houses.

FORTIFICATIONS.

The present system of fortifications which completely surround the City of Paris, date from 1841, during the reign of LOUIS PHILLIPPE and the Ministry of M. THIERS. The city proper, as has before been explained in the TIMES, is inclosed by a continuous line of bastioned fronts, each front nearly four hundred yards in length, without outworks. They have an ordinary rampart and parapet, entirely open overhead, with a scarp wall about thirty-three feet high. The ditches have a simple slope of earth for counterscarpe; and, in their front, a glacis leaving a wide berme on the surface of the ground between it and the ditch. The object of this simple fortified line is to secure the city from an escalade by open assault. The fortified line, commencing at the point where the Seine enters Paris, and where the numbering of the bastions begins, running from one to ninety, runs first north-east about a mile; then it turns a little to the west of north, for about three miles; it then makes a slight bend westerly and northerly for about one mile and a half; from this, its most northerly point, it turns somewhat to the south of west for three miles; thence, for two miles further, its course is south-west; thence, for somewhat over three miles, it runs a little to the west of south, where it nearly reaches its most southerly point; from this, for four miles and a half, it runs a little to the south of east, and finally, for about one mile and a half, runs north-east to the starting-point on the Seine—thus making the entire length of the line, estimating by straight lines from point to point, about twenty miles. Eighty-five bastions, all nearly of the same shape, and other advanced points, are destined to cover the outer extent of the moats, which can be filled with the waters of the Seine. The escarpment is lined with a wall which is covered by the glacis. The military road inside is paved. Near to this, and frequently parallel to it, is the line which joins all the railway lines running into Paris, and their eight termini. Sixty-six gates, close to which are placed the Bureaux de Douane, are pierced in the fortifications. The defenses of the city proper are therefore of the most formidable kind. But besides these defenses, Paris is surrounded by a network of forts. There are outside the surrounding wall, and about half a league distant from it, a series of fifteen detached forts, which are united partially by redoubts and intrenchments to the walls.

THE OUTER FORTS.

The detached exterior forts may be considered in three groups. We may first notice the group that forms the north-east line of these outside fortifications, from St. Denis to the north of Montmartre. The town of St. Denis alone is surrounded by three great forts. On the left of and close to the railway leading to Enghien and Montmorency, and behind the confluence of the canal of St. Denis with the Seine, is the fort of La Briche; to the north, and on the other side of the stream of Rouillon, is the fort of "La Double Couronne du Nord;" and on the south-east is the fort of the east. These three points are united together by ramparts and ditches which can be readily filled, and which are covered by the redoubt of Stains. St. Denis itself may therefore be considered a fortress. At 4,400 paces to the south-east of the eastern fort, and consequently nearer to Paris, is the fort of Aubervilliers. Between the two passes the railway to Soissons, and behind this line is the canal of St. Denis. The earth which was dug out of the canal forms before it a sort of parapet fortified by three redoubts. At a distance of 4,300 paces from the other side of the Canal de l'Ourcq and of the Strasbourg Railway, on the continuation of the height of Belleville by Pantin, is the fort of Romainville. It is 1,800 paces from the principal wall of defense. A series of intrenchments extends from the fort toward the Canal de l'Ourcq, while on the other side two redoubts defend the passage. Further off to the east and to the south, still on the outer side of the same line of hills, and almost in a line parallel to the railway to Mulhouse, the works of the fortifications, which are united by a paved road, are continued at about equal distances, the forts of Noisy, (3,500 paces,) Rosny, (3,200 paces,) and Nogent, (3,800.) There ends the line of hills which begins near Belleville, and descends by a steep incline toward the Marne. Between the above-named forts are placed at short intervals the redoubts of Noisy, Montreuil, Boissière, and Fontenay. The Marne, which is here 100 paces in breadth, forms a natural defense, fortified also by an intrenchment of 2,860 feet in length, consisting of a parapet and ditches covering the isthmus of St. Maur, where a bridge crosses the Marne. The two extremities of the intrenchment are flanked by the redoubts of Faisanderie and Gravelle. These the railway of Vincennes and La Varenne passes. All these works inclose in a semi-circle the castle of Vincennes, in which is the principal arsenal of Paris, on the edge of the great field for manœuvring artillery close to the Marne. On the other bank of this river, in the triangle formed by the union of the Seine and the Marne near Alfort, on the right side of the Lyons Railway, is the fort of Charenton, which closes the first line of defense. What adds to its strength is that the enceinte inclosed by the fortification answers admirably for an intrenched camp in which 200,000 men may be placed. The next group of detached forts to be described is that of those forming the southern line of exterior defenses. Opposite to Fort Charenton, and at a distance of 4,600 paces, on the left bank of the Seine, begins the southern line, with the fort of Ivry, which commands the neighborhood. In a straight line, nearly from east to west, the forts of Bicêtre, Montrouge, Vanves and Issy follow at equal distances of about 2,000 paces. The last-named rises to a height of about fifty feet above the Seine, which here leaves the city. Between them are the railways of Limours (Sceaux) and of Versailles (left bank.) The three last points are covered since the introduction of rifled cannon, which was not known at the time of the building of these forts, by the heights of Bacneux and Meudon. The third group of detached forts are those on the western side of Paris. This line of outside defense is naturally very easy, for the Seine, flowing in the direction of the north and north-east, turns toward St. Denis by St. Cloud, Boulogne, Surennes, Puteaux, Courbevoie, Neuilly, Asnières, Clichy and St. Ouen, places on the banks of the river. Between it and the town is the celebrated Bois de Boulogne. On the line indicated five bridges cross the Seine, and near the station of Asnières, on the left bank, the railways from Dieppe, Normandy, St. Germain and Versailles (right bank) unite and cross the river by a common bridge. A single fort, but the largest and strongest of all—that of Mont Valérien, situate 415 feet above the Seine, and from which there is a magnificent view of Paris—commands the whole of this space. A paved road joins Mont Valérien with the Bois de Boulogne, by the bridge of Surennes. We have spoken of the fort at Mont Valérien. The distance between this fort and the nearest of those about St. Denis is 16,500 paces, or nearly seven miles; and the distance from the fort of Issy is about 10,000 paces, or about four miles. This enumeration comprises the entire series of fortifications surrounding Paris, and rendering it one of the most strongly-fortified cities in the world. The greatest distance between any of the forts is that between Mont Valérien and the Fort de Nogent. It follows exactly the parallel, and at a distance of 27,000 paces, or nearly eleven miles; while in the southern direction the greatest distance, between St. Denis and the fort of Bicêtre, is 20,000 paces, or eight miles. The line of circumference which would join the exterior forts would be twenty-six miles, or twelve and a half hours' march. All the exterior forts have bastions. Further, the forts of Noisy, Rosny and Nogent have hornworks. The scarps and counterscarps are as high as those of the fortifications of Paris; covered ways, with trenches of masonry and bomb-proof powder-magazines are everywhere. All the forts communicate by telegraph with Paris and with each other.

OPINION OF A MILITARY WRITER.

With reference to the eastern side of Paris an eminent military writer says: "Any plan of attack on the eastern fronts of the fortified line would have to take into consideration the meshwork of defenses from the forts around St. Denis on the north, to those of Charenton, Ivry and Bicêtre, on the south. This zone includes the Bois de Vincennes, in front of the south-east angle of the fortified line. The orders given for the destruction of the Bois de Boulogne look to an attack by Mont Valérien, or at the south-west angle of the fortified line. This point, although behind the Seine, is a quite vulnerable one. By paralyzing the fire of Forts Mont Valérien, Issy, Vauve and Montrouse, the last three of which are comparatively weak works, by a heavy, incessant fire, un feu d'enfer, the points running north-east and south-east, that form this angle, might be rendered untenable by a powerful enfilading and reverse fire, thus making an opening into the city here quite practicable. The scarps, neither of the forts nor the fronts of the city, are well covered from fire; and the ditches are wanting in that chief feature of security against an open assault, high counter-scarps faced with masonry. From our own experience of the effects of shot, from long ranges, of rifled guns, at Savannah and Charleston, some idea may be formed of the vulnerability of Paris from like destructive means; and were its defenses now to be devised they would be somewhat different from what they are, constructed on data before the rifled and heavy guns now in use were introduced."

THE FRENCH FORCES.

It is not definitely known what the actual number of soldiers in Paris really is. Different reports place the number of men in the city and in the different forts at between 200,000 and 300,000. Besides these forces, it is said that the woods of Meudon and Clamart are occupied by Gen. DUCROT, lately in command of the First Division of the First Army Corps, with 50,000 men.

CITY WAR NEWS.

The German War Fund Collections.

Consul-General JOHANNES ROESSING, on Saturday, transmitted to the Central Society at Berlin another remittance to the amount of $50,000 of the war funds, the sum of $43,870 23 having been raised during the past week by contributions in this City and vicinity, and in various parts of the country. Of this sum $1,750 have been raised by the Committee in Boston. The Germans at College Point contributed $2,172; the German Society at Indianapolis, Ind., $4,000; the Germans of Bloomingdale, Ill., $500; the Germans of Pomeroy, Ohio, $150; the ladies of Belleville, Mo., $1,800, the proceeds of a fair; the German Aid Society at Lafayette, Ind., $2,200; the Newark Committee, $1,000, and the Executive Committee of this City, $28,000. Previous remittances to Germany by the Consul-General amounted to $120,000—total amount of remittances, $170,000. The Consul-General in his official report states that $10,000 were directly transmitted to Berlin from Philadelphia a few days since. The Germans at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, have raised £372 sterling. The Brooklyn Society transmitted $7,500 to the General Committee in this City. The German Patriotic Ladies' Committee, organized under the Presidency of Mme. ROESSING, wife of the Consul-General, is actively engaged in making preparations for the Fair in aid of the special war fund to be created. The Fair, as previously reported, will be opened in the Armory of the Thirty-seventh Regiment, corner of Thirty-sixth-street and Broadway. The price of the tickets for admission has been fixed at twenty-five cents for the hours from 2 P. M. to 6 P. M., and fifty cents from 6 P. M. to 10 P. M. Separate stands will be reserved, where the ladies of the vicinity of New-York, Brooklyn, Staten Island, Hoboken, Jersey City, Newark, College Point and other localities, may exhibit their goods. The Societies Liederkranz, Arion, the German Club of Hoboken, the Germania of Brooklyn, and others will be invited to assist in the undertaking. A number of ladies have been detailed to collect contributions among the down-town merchants.

French Republican Association.

The French Republican Association met yesterday morning, in Harmonie Hall, Prince-street, and received reports from the Defense Committee in regard to subscriptions and material aid for the Republican cause from all parts of the Union. RICHARD WALTERS' offer of $1,000 in gold was withdrawn, on the plea that it has already been devoted to a similar cause. The Defense Committee was increased, and M. SAINT-GAUDENS was elected Treasurer of the association. The Committee will forward 120 recruits for Paris by the steamer to-morrow. Remarks were made by M. VILA SUIREAU and others.

ITALY AND ROME.

The Pope Makes an Explanation—The City Ruled by Foreign Forces—A Delay of the Attack Asked—Capitulation Hourly Expected.

FLORENCE, Sept. 18.—An official dispatch from the head-quarters of the Italian Army of Occupation in the Roman territory, at Monte Rotundo, dated Saturday, Sept. 17, says Baron VON ARNIM came to Gen. CADORNA'S quarters by authorization of the Pope to explain that the foreign military forces for the moment ruled the City of Rome, and His Holiness was unable to prevent resistance to the entrance of the Italian troops. He wished to know what course Gen. CADORNA intended to take. The General replied that his purpose was fully set forth in the royal proclamation. The King had shown great patience, but the fact that foreigners attempted to defend the city and rule the Pope, tried that patience severely. The Baron VON ARNIM begged for a delay of twenty-four hours, that he might bring additional influence to bear on the Pope. Gen. CADORNA so far yielded, as to suspend the attack on Rome for twenty-four hours, but reserving the right to manœuvre his troops, which now encircle the city.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—The latest advices from Paris state that the Pope and the Diplomatic Corps have taken refuge in the Castle of St. Angelo, and the capitulation of the city is hourly expected.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—The people of Rome are in favor of admitting the national troops, but the Zouaves and the clergy restrain them from taking practical steps in that direction.

DEFENSE OF PARIS.

Clearing the Zone of Fire—The Cattle Supply in the Bois de Boulogne—The Volunteers in the Gardes Nationale—Determination of the Prussians—The Mania for Speculation.

From Our Military Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Sept. 2, 1870.

Work upon the fortifications goes on with great rapidity, and although there is now little remaining to do upon the forts themselves, there is an immense amount of labor required to clear away the buildings from the zone of fire. The rapidity with which houses are taken down, and all traces of them swept away, is certainly marvelous. The proprietors of the buildings within the zone have shown a patriotic spirit, and not a single objection has been made to the expediency of this wholesale destruction. It must not be understood that all buildings beyond the fortifications are torn down. Only those which come within a certain zone are sacrificed; but beyond that zone the proprietors themselves are at work. Houses which, a few days ago, resounded with song and happy laughter, are now deserted and in ruins. Everything which could be transported has been carried away—stair-cases and windows, balconies and stuccoed ornaments, all, in fact, but the bare walls themselves, has been taken to the city proper. To occupy these buildings under fire from the forts would be dangerous, indeed, to the enemy, for in their present condition a single shell could bring the walls down upon the heads of the Prussians who sought shelter in them from the deadly fire of the forts. Thousands of men are still engaged in clearing away the zone of fire. Last evening I passed along the quays where a body of workmen, in blouses and with spades upon their shoulders, were marching to their quarters. They were hardy peasants, accustomed to toil, and very glad to assist in the defense of the country by the use of the spade; and one could but remark the entire absence of all young men. Near the Rue Dauphine their procession was stopped by a long train of wagons bringing in flour, and at the same time a score of men were trying to urge a flock of sheep through the crowded street. In the train also one saw, here and there, the little peasant's carts bearing in the household goods of some poor family driven away from its cherished home. The train of flour was advancing but slowly, for it ran to the depot of the Seventh Arrondissement, and had formed in line for a distance of near a mile. Each one of these wagons carries about thirty sacks, say twenty barrels, of flour. Cattle, sheep and hogs pour in so rapidly that the authorities begin to be a little embarrassed by numbers. The Bois de Boulogne is full of beeves, and the number was so great a few days ago that it gave rise to the report of many deaths for want of food. This is not true. Indeed, I imagine that it was a story started by a company here who have some kind of an "ax to grind"—an infallible method, I believe, of preserving meats always fresh, and always a little better than when just killed. If we could only get at the bottom of most rumors, it would generally be found that they arise in the brains of enthusiasts who have some "infallible method" either of preserving meats or of destroying the Prussians. But the disappearance of numbers of cattle tended to give currency to this report. All are being removed as fast as possible, and certain fields have been cleared of them in order to give room for military works, yet there are thousands remaining, and it is by no means an uninteresting spectacle to see these herds guarded by shepherds either in uniform or in blouses.

SPIRITED SCENES.

Any one passing along the boulevards this morning would have witnessed scenes which go far to show the spirit of the French nation at this moment. At 10 o'clock the newly organized corps of Gardes Nationale meet for drill, and I saw a number of splendid private carriages, some with coronets upon the panels, containing soldiers in the uniform so well known in Paris. These are the well-to-do and wealthy men of the city up to the age of forty-five who have answered the appeal to their patriotism, and have rushed to arms to defend the capital. More than once I overheard slighting remarks about these men, while an incredulous smile hung about the lips of the old campaigners—of the cafés. But an hour later a regiment of these men came by, and no one could fail to pay a tribute to their appearance and their drill. After only about three weeks they have become most excellent soldiers, and they marched with an order and precision which would have done credit to a regiment of the line. I have no means of knowing the exact number of these men, but I judge that there are some forty thousand of them already drilled and ready for work with the Chassepot. And I believe that they will do good service. Intelligence goes a long ways in a soldier, although NAPOLEON'S idea was that the Gardes Nationale should be selected from the most stupid men of the Provinces. It may not make them fire a gun any better, but it will make them "stick," for with intelligence there is a certain amount of pride. I have more than once been in places where, I do not hesitate to confess it, if I had had no more responsibility than a simple private, I should have looked around very carefully for a place of shelter. Many did so, but pride kept upon the field the intelligent and well-born young men of our troop. All of these men have pride—a strong pride in being French, and they know that they might as well look their last upon Paris as to show cowardice before the invader. But, with their present spirit, even the masses will fight to the death. Mobs are always cowardly and unreliable, but the men who would be worthless in a street fight become splendid soldiers when thoroughly drilled, and animated with a spirit of patriotism. The Parisians boast no longer; they no longer roam the streets in bands, shouting "A Berlin," or chanting the Marseillaise; but in their present attitude I find ample assurance that they are determined to fight to the death for the defense of their city. M. THIERS has well expressed the feeling of a majority, today. "We shall always have," he says, "two and a half Prussians against one, and we shall conquer them, although it may not be in some days. But let them come and besiege Paris, and I will certify that not one of them shall repass the frontier." Of course M. THIERS means to say that no organized bodies shall pass the frontier, although he speaks with some hyperbole, and I cannot but grow in his opinion day by day. Unless that great army retreats before it reaches the Seine, only straggling bands of it will ever cross the Rhine. You perceive that even I, not easily carried away by enthusiasm or excitement, have become thoroughly imbued with the prevailing sentiment of the day. One hundred thousand of the Garde Mobile have been ordered from the country and called into the defense of Paris. This force is about to arrive, and it is a question where they are to be quartered. Some say that the newly-erected, but not yet furnished, houses of the Faubourg St. Germain will be used; some recommend the houses of the rich who have left the city. At Troyes strong measures were taken by the City Council, which decided that the closed houses of men who had fled should be opened to the soldiers, by order of the municipal authorities. This is severe, perhaps, but not entirely unjust, when we consider it on all sides. The better way, in my opinion, would be to billet these Mobiles upon the people of Paris, as the enemy's soldiers would be billeted upon them in case of a capture of the city. But there is a large number of empty houses, barely finished as yet, which may soon be made into effective barracks.

HELP FOR THE WOUNDED.

Offerings for the wounded are now the order of the day, and we have some amusing as well as humane and patriotic scenes. The Empress has given Compeigne for a hospital, and ISABELLA, the Catholic, has made an offering of the Hotel Basclewski. Hundreds of private citizens have sent in their offers to take one, two, or more wounded in their houses, to nurse them and feed them free of cost. Nearly all of the public companies, too, have shown a patriotic spirit. The Swiss Omnibus Company, which has already given a large number of men and more than 1,500 horses to the Government for the war, now offers several of its city depots for hospitals. Besides this, the Company gives its farm of Claye, Department of Seine-et-Marne, for an ambulance. But there is some policy in the latter gift, as hundreds of gentlemen from the districts likely to be overrun by the enemy are very anxious to get the red cross of the hospital flag flying from their chateaux.

MANIA FOR SPECULATION.

Among the curses of war is the intense mania for speculation which seems to take possession of certain classes, and notably the dealers in provisions and the necessaries of life. In my last letter I mentioned the rise in potatoes, and today I have quite an incident to relate in this connection. A small measure of potatoes is ordinarily sold for from fifty to sixty centimes. A week ago they went up to one franc twenty centimes, and this morning the dealers demanded two and a half francs. A further rise was tried, but suddenly the women held a council of war, and determined to stop that little game. In a mass the insurgents charged the stands, overturned tables and measures, helping themselves to all they wished. It is not a very good way to diminish the price of this most excellent vegetable, largely used in Paris, but one must admit that the provocation was great. In such a crisis, the Government may well be excused for fixing the price of articles of prime necessity.

THE EXPULSION OF GERMANS.

The order expelling all the Germans from Paris has brought out some curious facts and some unexpected results. So astonishing were a few of these revelations that a sudden lock down was made, and some Germans were allowed to remain in Paris, under certain conditions. One of these conditions was to be guaranteed by well-known Frenchmen. There are many persons about the Court born across the Rhine, and it was found that men of German birth were high in authority here. Some of the best workmen and engineers on the railway lines were Germans, and more than one of the directors were of that nationality by birth. M. BRETTENBACH, a Bavarian, is one of the Superintendents of the Telegraph, while M. KANDAL, Director of the Post-office, was born at Cologne. So sweeping an order as that of Gen. TROCHU could hardly be carried out in a cosmopolitan city like Paris.

"FRICOTEURS."

In 1813 the energetic name of Fricoteurs was given to that class of rascals who live by preying upon the public, and this name is again coming into use. Several new tricks have lately been devised by this class of people, the last being to play the disconsolate father or widow of a soldier killed in battle, and beg money to bring home his remains. This game is said to have succeeded surprisingly until the exposé came.

FRANCE AND EUROPE.

Position of the Powers—Tone of the Press—Sentiment in France—Correspondent's Perils—Horrors of War.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Sept. 3, 1870.

The movements in Germany against any peace which will not dismember and humiliate France are disturbing Europe. Austria sees her peril at last, and Russia begins to grow anxious. Germany demands simply that there shall be no Power in Europe strong enough to resist her. The report that Russia and Austria have agreed to resist the cession of Alsace and Lorraine to Germany has an alarming vraisemblance. The English friends of Prussia see in it a prospect of the extension of the war, and the English papers are filled with demands for the immediate organization of an English army of at least half a million of men. There is now no organization which extends beyond about 50,000, and even that is of a very imperfect character. But, supposing England were prepared to enter on an European war, would she take the part of Prussia, and aid in the humiliation and dismemberment of her nearest neighbor and most faithful ally? Would she fight against Austria, with whom she sympathized in 1866, and help the despoiler of Denmark? Will England join Germany in a war against France, Russia, Austria and Italy, fighting against her own allies in the Crimea? It does not seem probable.

TONE OF THE PRESS.

The Daily News, more Prussian than the Prussians, fanatically German, refuses to believe in these all-omened rumors of intervention, and gets very angry about them. Germany, according to the News, is a non-aggressive Power; but the News, as well as Prof. MAX MULLER in the Times, forgets Denmark—forgets the whole history of Prussia. German unity has been made by the needle-gun; this war was accepted by Prussia, if it was not willfully provoked by her—accepted without the least effort at conciliation, because it placed all Germany in her hands to use and mold to her will. But a German Empire, though it may have no terrors for England, must be a cause of alarm to Austria and Russia. The army that can penetrate France, capture Alsace and Lorraine, and take Paris, can as easily go to Vienna or to Moscow. In short, let Germany be successful against France and no Power in Europe can resist her, or live but by her permission. The other Powers of Europe must then, in self-defense, and as the only means of assuring their own existence, unite against her.

SENTIMENT IN FRANCE.

As to the feeling in France the republican LOUIS BLANC, represents it fairly. He says:

"The war, for us, is no longer one of aggression, it is one of self-defense. Its nature has been changed, in our eyes, by the invasion of the French territory, and by the intention, loudly proclaimed, of dismembering it. The French, at present, are fighting neither for military supremacy nor for dominion. They are fighting as sons will to save the life of their mother; and I have no hesitation in saying that the proud, unflinching attitude of France, under the terrible disasters she is enduring, is blundering despotism and uncontrolled will of one man, entitles her to the sympathies of any such as comprehend that there is no vain glory, but real greatness, in the power of bearing misfortune with a stout heart and calm courage."

CORRESPONDENTS' PERILS.

Most of the war correspondents in France have been imprisoned, or ordered out of the country. The Standard has one on the Belgian frontier, who has been able to send some interesting, though rather incoherent accounts of the recent battles. He rode to some point of observation, saw what he could of fights, successes and reverses along a line of several miles, and then sent a courier with his hasty jottings to the nearest Belgian Post-office. It is the same sad story—regiments half or two-thirds destroyed, positions taken or retaken, the ground covered with dead and wounded, defeat at one point, victory at another—horrible waste of life, the wounded left for days, perhaps, to suffer from the cold rains, poor people flying in terror from burning villages, wide-spread horrors and desolation.

HORRORS OF WAR.

The Spectator estimates that after the battles of Gravellotte and Resonville there were fifty thousand wounded left on the ground—a number requiring five hundred surgeons and ten thousand men. London, Birmingham and Sheffield have been stripped of surgical instruments. The dead and dying of wounds and sickness around Metz alone are reckoned at 150,000 men—as many as the adult male population of two cities like Glasgow, or nine hundred populous villages. At the battle of Woerth one small Bavarian town lost the whole of its young men—an entire generation. In every battle where you read of the loss of half a German regiment, it means the death or wounding of half a district, and sorrow or mourning in every household. It is like the last Egyptian plague, the death of the first-born of every family. It is worse, for husbands and fathers are nearly as numerous as sons. The invaded suffer more terribly. The invading army not only slays, but plunders. It sends out cavalry on every side, and brings in food and forage for the devouring host. Cattle, horses, crops, men, are all placed under requisition. Ten Departments of France suffer famine, or are threatened with it. The poor people who fly across the Belgian frontier are driven back, unless they bring money to support themselves. And there comes murrain and blight, and pestilence.

MONADNOCK.

A Mother's Revenge—Cowhiding Scene in Cincinnati.

The Cincinnati Commercial of the 16th inst. says: "There was an extraordinary scene, yesterday, in the front room of the second story of a house on Moore-street, between Vine and Walnut, in the cowhiding, by the lady occupying the room, of a shoemaker who lives in the third story. She had learned that he had several times insulted her daughter, only twelve years of age. Justly incensed, she procured a heavy cowhide—such as draymen use—and having collected some of her neighbors in an adjoining room for witnesses called the shoemaker, B. HOEFFER, to come to the front room to fix a window. He came, having no suspicion of what was in store for him, unconscious of the presence of the lady. She locked the door and pocketed the key. She produced the formidable whip, and demanded to know if he had insulted her daughter. The shoemaker was overwhelmed with confusion, confessed, and talked compromise. This was a fatal step. While the confession strengthened the woman's resolution and nerves, the proposition to compromise increased her anger ten-fold. She proceeded to 'lay on' over his body and shoulders, over his face and neck and hands. She flourished the lash around her head and brought it down upon him with all the strength she possessed, while she followed him around the room, as he in vain sought to escape. She, in fact, whipped 'the rascal' until—in seventh was exhausted, and her desire for revenge satiated, and then and not before, she desisted."

PRUSSIA AND AUSTRIA.

The Overthrow of the Germanic Confederation in 1866—Political History of Germany During the Four Previous Years.

The last London Athenæum contains an exceedingly interesting review of a work just published by Sir ALEXANDER MALET, entitled The Overthrow of the Germanic Confederation by Prussia in 1866. We quote it entire:

The appearance of this work is exceedingly well-timed. At the present moment, the history of the war of 1866 between Prussia and Austria is interesting in the highest degree, both as laying bare the policy of Prussia, and discovering the means by which that policy can be carried out. The political history of Germany during the years 1863—1866 is the theme of Sir ALEXANDER MALET, late Her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary to the Diet at Frankfort; and he also furnishes valuable military information with regard to that part of the war of 1866 in Northern and Western Germany, and devotes a chapter to the military growth of Prussia. Sir ALEXANDER MALET commences with a brief sketch of the Constitution of the Diet of the Germanic Confederation. This chapter, however, would be more appreciated by the antiquarian than the general reading public, and does not call for particular notice. The history also of the spoliation of Denmark, which follows, is in a certain sense a thing of the past—a regretted, but an accepted, accomplished and irrevocable fact. The chapters, however, devoted to this subject are interesting both on account of the singularly excellent opportunities possessed by the author for becoming acquainted and forming an opinion of the facts, and also on account of the part played by our own Government, and because it was the first act of the drama which culminated only a few weeks ago in the virtual union of all Germany. It is only fair to Sir ALEXANDER MALET to give the following extract from his preface:

"Time has already revealed many mysteries inexplicable at the period in which the events occurred, and relieved me from the duty of silence on circumstances of which at the time I gained knowledge only from my official position."

The Schleswig-Holstein question was stated by Lord PALMERSTON to have been one which was only thoroughly understood by himself and another person who at the time of its complete development was dead. We shall not seek, therefore, to analyse the matter, and shall content ourselves with pointing out the dishonesty of the German Powers, the questionable conduct of the Emperor NAPOLEON, and the feeble misleading policy of Earl RUSSELL.

Count BISMARCK embraced the opportunity afforded by the dispute with Denmark to lay the foundation of Prussian supremacy in Germany, and made use of the terror entertained by Austria of a democratic movement, to render her an unconscious accomplice in Prussian aggrandisement. The feelings which actuated Count BISMARCK are plainly, forcibly, and, we believe, correctly stated by the author:

"M. DE BISMARCK'S whole soul glowed with the passionate resolve to expel Austria from Germany. It was not in his character to hesitate as to means; and neither moral nor material obstacles diverted him from his object. In fact, he entered on the contest unencumbered by scruples of any kind. To raise Prussia to the political status which he thought that his country ought to hold, was his religion. He entered the path of action with the fervor of a Mohammed enforcing a novel faith, and, like Mohammed, he succeeded."

The first step toward carrying out his object was an association with Austria in regard to the Schleswig-Holstein affair; Austria being simply used to assist in drawing out of the fire chestnuts of which she was destined never to have a share. The co-operation of Austria having been secured, the next step was to make a cloak of the Diet to the high-handed proceedings contemplated; the Diet itself being afterward cast on one side as a useless and cumbersome garment. The matter, as regarded Schleswig at least, partook of an international nature, though it suited the Germans to deny this obvious fact. It was necessary, therefore, to prevent the intervention of France, bound not only by the treaty of London, in 1852, to guarantee the integrity of Denmark, but also by the memory of past friendship, and great sacrifices, to prevent the spoliation of her steadfast ally. Sir ALEXANDER MALET explains the refusal of France to interfere, and this explanation, though founded only on surmise, is probable enough when read by the light of subsequent events. Even the surmises, moreover, of one in Sir A. MALET'S position, and possessing special means of information and peculiar opportunities for drawing just inferences, are worthy of consideration. The explanation is given in the following passage:

"There exists, however, a very general persuasion that M. DE BISMARCK had already found means to influence the Imperial mind; that it had been surmised that his own schemes of aggrandizement for Prussia at the expense both of Denmark and of Germany, had been more than hinted at, and that visions of possible territorial advantages to accrue to France may have been held out to the Emperor, and entertained by him, in case Prussia was left free to pursue her own course without interruption. To reasons such as these, it is imagined, may in great measure be ascribed the quiescent attitude taken by the Imperial Government in this question."

The official utterances of the Emperor, through his Ambassador in London, offer the following justification of his conduct:

"The Emperor has always been disposed to pay great regard to the feelings and sentiments of nationalities. It is not to be denied that the national feelings and aspirations of Germany tend to a closer connection with the Germans of Holstein and of Schleswig. The Emperor has no disposition to say course which should bind him to oppose in arms the wishes of Germany. It may be comparatively easy for England to carry on a war which can never go beyond maritime operations of blockade and capture of ships. Schleswig and England are far apart from each other. But the soil of Germany touches the soil of France, and a war between France and Germany would be one of the most burdensome and one of the most hazardous in which the French Empire could engage."

This passage must possess a mournful significance for the French at the present moment. The insincerity and dishonesty of the German sovereigns—for they must all share the guilt, though by a fitting retribution they shared none of the profits, of the spoliation of Denmark—are clearly indicated in the pages of the work before us. By means of the opening given by Holstein, they determined and contrived to bring Schleswig within the scope of their operations. It must, however, be admitted, that the impulse given to interference in the matter of Schleswig came from below—was democratic and at the same time sentimental in its nature; and it was difficult for the Princes of Germany to resist, without risk to their thrones. Considering the astuteness of the politicians engaged in the disgraceful business, it is evident that it is to their conduct, rather than to their words or documents, that we must look for evidence of their dishonesty. The following passages are nevertheless interesting and deserving of attention. Extract from a letter from the British Ambassador at Vienna to Earl RUSSELL, giving an account of an interview with Count RECHBERG, the Austrian Premier:

"His Excellency is as unwilling as ever to admit that the interests of Schleswig are disconnected from those of Holstein, and consequently of Germany, and he considers that, as they have been mixed together for so long past, it is impossible for Germany to abandon its right to interfere."

Extract from the British Ambassador at Vienna to Earl RUSSELL, giving an account of a subsequent interview with Count RECHBERG:

"That as to Schleswig or Jutland, there was no thought of entering either country."

From the beginning Earl RUSSELL endeavored to separate the questions of Schleswig and Holstein, the right of the Diet to seat an Envoy there at with regard to the latter Duchy he frankly acknowledged. The Schleswig question he, however, firmly asserted was one of an international nature, and should be dealt with in concert with the signatories of the treaty of London. He for a long time strove to procure the assent of Germany to mediation, but received in return the most insulting neglect of his representations, and a contemptuous indifference, which has gone far to lower the influence of British diplomacy on the Continent. It is true that he was not, save in one instance, treated with verbal discourtesy, but in substance he was to be received with "This is no affair of yours—mind your own business."

Again, with regard to Earl RUSSELL from Frankfort:

"I have the honor to inform your Lordship that I am about to start for Berlin, in accordance with the instructions I received from your Lordship, and I am encouraged in undertaking this journey by the assurance which I have received of the intention with which certain powers entertain an earnest desire that England will not interfere materially, and our counsels, regarded as unfriendly, have no weight."

On one occasion, Sir A. MALET was actually told by the Bavarian envoy to the Diet that he looked on Lord RUSSELL'S dispatches as so much waste paper—an expression for which Sir A. MALET, however, required and obtained ample apology. The Bavarian Minister was, however, correct in his description of Earl RUSSELL'S representations and threats. Finding that mediation was unavailing, Earl RUSSELL betook himself to the last Memorandum presented by Sir A. BUCHANAN to Count BERNSTORFF, Nov. 24, 1863:

"Should Federal troops enter Holstein on purely Federal grounds, Her Majesty's Government would not interfere; but should it appear that Federal troops had entered the Duchy on international grounds, Her Majesty's Government may be obliged to interfere."

Again, see Earl RUSSELL to Sir A. BUCHANAN, Dec. 25, 1863:

"Any precipitate movement on the part of the German Confederation at the present moment may lead to consequences fatal to the peace of Europe, and may involve Germany, in particular, in difficulties of a most serious nature."

The following extracts from Earl RUSSELL'S correspondence with the British Ambassador at Paris, under date Jan. 24, 1864, are worthy of notice:

"Her Majesty's Government seek for the concert and co-operation of France, Russia and Sweden, in order to give, if necessary, material assistance to Denmark in the maintenance of their disencumbered position. I am not prepared to say what kind of material support, but that I would define the cases in which such support should be given in a dispatch, which I had prepared for the Cabinet, to be afterward submitted for the decision of Her Queen."

Finding that the threats of England were looked upon as so much brutum fulmen, Earl RUSSELL took lower ground, and made the grant of any material assistance to Denmark to depend on the concurrence of France and Russia. These Powers, however, refused that concurrence; and Earl RUSSELL'S warlike intentions oozed out of his fingers' ends like Bob Acres' courage. England had, nevertheless, as is apparent from the Danish Ambassador's dispatch, dated Feb. 11, 1864, promised unconditional aid if Schleswig were attacked:

"Recently, too, the Cabinet of London gave it to be understood at Frankfort that, in the case of an attack of Schleswig, Denmark would not be left alone in the contest."

Schleswig was attacked, and England made no sign.

The history of the operations in Western and Northern Germany in 1866 is clearly told, and forms an interesting supplement to Capt. HOZIER'S history of the war. Sir A. MALET was living at the time on the scene of action—was personally acquainted with many of the actors in the campaign—and, though a civilian, shows in general considerable talent for describing and analyzing military operations.

For the political manœuvres which preceded the outbreak of war, and the conduct of Count BISMARCK toward his inoffensive neighbors, we refer the reader to the book itself. As to the campaign, it was a strong illustration of the inefficiency of the Federal military organization. Other causes, however, equally contributed to failure. Speaking of the troops acting under orders of the Diet, Sir A. MALET says:

"When the Diet's decision, of June 14, called these troops into immediate activity, the faultiness of Federal military arrangement became instantly apparent, and it was manifest that a longer or fuller period would be required to prepare the several contingents to take the field in such an efficient state of preparation as modern warfare demands. The assembling, and training of horses especially, was very imperfectly accomplished, and the cavalry, artillery and train were accordingly ill-provided, and their efficiency proportionately imperfect."

The force was divided into two armies; one under Prince ALEXANDER of Hesse, the other, consisting entirely of Bavarians, under the command of Prince CHARLES of Bavaria. The chief command of both armies was also vested in the latter Prince. The choice of a Commander-in-Chief was unfortunate. Prince CHARLES was old, slow, obstinate, and of no experience in modern warfare. The result was, that though far superior in numbers, he was everywhere worsted by the inferior Prussian forces. By his neglect to send aid to Hanover, moreover, he contributed in a great measure to the surrender of the gallant contingent which that Kingdom had placed in the field. Another cause of Prussian success was the treachery or incapacity of Prince WILLIAM of Baden, who commanded the Baden division of the army of the Diet. At the commencement of the campaign he retired from Giessen without orders, thereby uncovering the left of Prince ALEXANDER'S army and the City of Frankfort; later on, in the actions on the Tauber, he withdrew without orders, after a merely formal resistance, thereby causing the retreat of the army from the line of that river. Lastly, the next day he, without any cause declined to support a Wurtemberg division which sent urgent demands for assistance to him. The theory of treachery is strongly supported by a very significant passage in the book under review:

"The humbled Southern States of Germany, with the exception of Baden, addressed themselves to France, as a mediator between them and the conquering Power. Baden had good grounds for reliance on the family ties existing between the House of HOHENZOLLERN and the Grand-Ducal family, and for believing that their State would be leniently treated."

The staff of the Confederate Army does not appear to great advantage in the history of the present campaign. For this apparently the two chief Generals are not responsible. As well as other defects, it must be attributed to the vicious system of Federal military organization. Prince ALEXANDER of Hesse, in a published journal of the campaign, tells us that the Bavarian staff, "started with what unwillingness and misgiving he entered on the command assigned to him. The faulty equipment and diversity of organization of the various contingents composing the Eighth Army Corps, as well as the principles of the Federal military constitution, by authority of which the corps was assembled and himself intrusted with the command, are clearly set forth. The Prince was not even allowed to select the members of his personal staff, his aides-de-camp and every functionary of the army being named by the various military authorities in the States whose contingents were placed under his orders. These several contingents varied in their words of command, in the system of manœuvring, in the calibre of small arms, in their artillery system. The whole body of the Eighth Corps presented an assemblage of troops from which excellent material might have been selected, but which would have needed far more time than was allowed to its chief to mold it into the homogeneity necessary for successful military action. No officer or man of the whole body, save of the Austrian division, had ever been in action, and it was only at the end of June that the corps had been assembled. What results could be hoped for from such defects in the essentials of preparation?"

A useful warning is given to us in the foregoing passage, as well as in several others scattered over this book, which show that success in war can only be obtained by careful preparation in time of peace.

Among the most regretable episodes of this war is the treatment of the free City of Frankfort by Gens. VON FALCKENSTEIN and MANTEUFFEL. In giving an account of this instance of Prussian brutality, Sir A. MALET relates that of which he, being on the spot, was personally cognizant. On less authority than this we should hesitate to accept the confirmation of the newspaper statements of the time. It would be painful to attempt a detail of the various acts of ill-treatment which Frankfort, which had been entered without opposition, suffered at the hands of the imitators of the ruffians of the Thirty Years' War. It is sufficient to say that Sir A. MALET simply confirms all that was stated at the time in relation to taxation, namely that Gen. MANTEUFFEL threatened pillage and bombardment if $2,100,000 were not paid by the citizens within twenty-four hours. It is pleasant to be able to state that this exaction was ultimately remitted at the personal intercession of the kind-hearted Queen of Prussia.

In his chapter on the Prussian Army, the author tells us little which those who have studied military matters did not know before. The history of the progress and development of the Prussian military system is not, however, without interest to the general reader. The principal change effected in the system of SCHARNHORST is that by which the service in the reserve is extended from two to four years, and the forming of the Landwehr into a separate army, instead of placing it in division as formerly with the regular troops. With regard to the extension of the service in the reserve, Gen. VON MOLTKE gives the following weighty testimony in favor of thoroughly trained soldiers:

"On our side, we heard everywhere the cry, 'Where is the Captain?' what said the Captain as to where we should go? This instinct of hanging together under all circumstances cannot be drilled into a man; it must be the habit of his life."

The advantages of the localization of corps, which has been recommended for our own service, are urged in a passage which well merits the attention of Mr. CARDWELL:

"The highly valuable element which the French call esprit de corps, is nowhere better understood or maintained than in the Prussian Army. Each regiment is indeed localized, and has its own peculiar recruiting district, and its own landwehr, wherein serve the time-expired men of the line regiments and of the Guard."

The system of calling up the reserve appears admirable, and may furnish a worthy example for us in the organisation of our reserve forces:

"A telegraphic signal from head-quarters puts the whole machinery in operation at once. In the Landwehr offices of every village the summonses for assembly lie constantly ready, and have only to be distributed. Every individual attached to the commissariat, the hospitals, or field post-offices, or any other employ, in case of war, knows his destination beforehand, and only requires notice to present himself."

We will conclude this necessarily imperfect review of a valuable book by giving an extract which it would be, perhaps, well if our military authorities would reflect on:

"In squad and company drill and in gymnastics, which are carefully attended to, the subaltern officers and Captains invariably discharge duties left in the English Army to the non-commissioned officers. By this system, men and officers become more familiarized with each other, and this is immensely in favor of the Prussian system, in the wear and tear of actual service."

A number of lazy workmen, who won't work, make a habit of going about the streets of Providence, R. I., asking for employment from persons who have none to give. By this shrewd dodge they secure sympathy and procure money to spend at the public-houses.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A National Scandal—Will the United States Preserve or Maim the Ocmulgee?

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

On the 25th of January, 1870, the United States steamer Ocmulgee was struck by the British steamer Deerhound in fifteen minutes entirely disappeared. Four officers and fifty-seven enlisted men were saved; twenty officers and ninety-five men were lost. On the 5th of February Commander WILLIAMS' body was recovered, and buried with military and naval honors; the body of the carpenter, Mr. PINNIE, was also found, and Japanese divers went down and recovered a few trifles, and that was all.

After a while it was discovered that at low water one of the masts was visible, and the United States Minister, Mr. DE LONG, under date of Feb. 1, 1870, states. "I shall take immediate steps, in concert with the naval officer on this station, for the recovery of the public property."

Under date of Feb. 7, Rear-Admiral ROWAN, writing from his flag-ship, the Delaware, at Hong Kong, says: "I shall proceed immediately to Yokohama. I shall also attend to the recovery of the bodies from the wreck and the property, if divers can be found to undertake the work."

Here are two specific promises made by the two highest representatives of the United States in Japan, yet nearly eight months have elapsed and not a solitary step has been taken to recover the dead bodies of those heroes of the war and their personal effects, so dear to the fathers, mothers, wives, children and kindred they have left to mourn their untimely end. Must the adage ever be true that "Republics are notoriously ungrateful!" No strictures are here intended on the course of Admiral ROWAN or Minister DE LONG, but the trouble is this—the hands of our naval commanders are so tied at those distant stations that, unless they possess more than ordinary moral courage, they dare not go out of the strict letter of their duty, and our diplomatic representatives in the East have such miserable salaries that any independence of action, like the incurring of pecuniary obligation to enable them to sustain the national honor, would render them simply ridiculous, and would lead to the certain protest of any draft drawn in the cause of humanity, even though the case was like the present one—an historic ship, worth, on a mere money basis, over half a million of dollars, and which can be raised today, if the Government of the United States will authorize that to be done.

The death of Admiral FARRAGUT has placed at the head of our navy the son of that old sea-hero of the Essex. Will not Admiral PORTER do something to soothe the sad hearts of those who have perhaps given their all to their country? Will not ROWAN take some steps to remove this national scandal? He is now at the Capital, bearing the new honors of a Vice-Admiral. If PORTER and ROWAN will only move in this matter, the Oneida can be made the gratitude of a great nation will live in song and story long after mere monuments of brass, or bronze, or stone, have disappeared beneath the relentless tooth of time. The Lincoln Statue in Union Square.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Before the workmen leave the Lincoln Monument, pray beseech the owner to turn the statue around facing the north, (like the Washington statue,) so that it can be seen by the world. Now, in order to be seen, a person must go down to Fourteenth-street, and even then if a number wished to see it a very small crowd would fill the sidewalk. If facing north it could be seen by multitudes going up or down the square, or both, and from the park as well. Its present position is an intense failure. S. T. Q.

St. Matthew's Church, Jersey City.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your issue of Sept. 13 contains a long account of the churches in your neighboring city, but your reporter's notes in reference to St. Matthew's Church are somewhat defective. As it is well to preserve the history of a parish which, although within less than two miles from the wealthy parishes of New-York, struggled for existence for eighteen years, I send you the following, culled from the journals of the New-Jersey Diocesan Conventions:

Rev. JOSEPH WILLARD, rector of Trinity Church, Newark, visited the "City of Jersey" on Sunday, the 21st day of August, 1808, "performed divine service and preached there; it being the first time that any clergyman of our Church had ever officiated at that place." "By the highly laudable exertions of HARRY CALDWELL, Esq., Major DAVID HUNT, PHILIP WILLIAMS, Esq., and a few other gentlemen, divine service was continued occasionally, from that time till the 8th day of December following," when St. Matthew's Church was duly organized. In the month of March, 1809, Mr. WILLARD again visited the place, and in that year the parish was admitted into the Convention, and "was partially supplied by Rev. EDMUND D. BARRY, of New-York." In 1811, Mr. BARRY reported, through Rev. Mr. RUDD, of Elizabethtown, that "though the congregation is small, and has many difficulties and much opposition to contend with, yet it has, with a becoming zeal, supported its infant establishment, and provided a convenient building for the performance of divine service."

In the years 1812-13-14 no report was made. In 1815 Mr. BARRY stated that "in consequence of an agreement entered into with the Presbyterian congregation in Jersey, the service of our church was performed only on every other Sunday. Circumstances rendered this arrangement necessary." In 1817 Bishop CROES, (not CROSS,) who had been consecrated in 1815 the first Bishop in New-Jersey, reported to the Convention that Mr. BARRY had removed to the Diocese of Maryland, and in 1818 that "licenses had been granted to JOHN GRIGG and WILLIAM RICHMOND, candidates for orders in New-York, to officiate in St. Matthew's." From 1819 to 1821 no report. In October, 1821, the Bishop visited the Parish, and in the following year reported that he had been informed that St. Matthew's was regularly supplied on every second Sunday by Rev. CAVE JONES, of New-York. He visited the church again in October, 1822, when it was probably vacant. In 1824 Rev. E. D. BARRY, who was now S. D. D., had returned to New-York, and the Bishop stated that he very gladly, at his request, "afford[ed] some services to the church in the City of Jersey." In 1826 Dr. BARRY reported that the number of families professing themselves Episcopalians was about twenty, and of communicants about ten, and that the "church, from a variety of causes, had, since he relinquished the charge of it in 1816, been very much reduced, and almost extinct." "Now, however," he said, "the prospects are more cheering. The blessing of the Most High seems thus far to have attended my humble labors in this small portion of the Lord's vineyard." In 1827, "the prospects of the congregation continue to be encouraging." "Hitherto the means used to institute our enquiries in the counties of South and Second principles appear to have been overruled in our favor." In August, 1827, Bishop CROES visited the parish, and afterward reported thus to the Convention: "This church, from the very low state to which it has been reduced in consequence of deaths and removals, has, within the last two years, under the blessing of God, exceedingly improved, and promises to be permanent." In 1828, Dr. BARRY reported that in consequence of the laudable exertions of the congregation, aided by some benevolent friends in the City of New-York, they had "procured the exclusive right to worship in the only place which for many years had been used for this purpose in the City of Jersey. This building (he observed) has lately been fitted up in a neat and handsome manner. Divine worship is performed statedly twice every Sunday," &c. The number of families was about thirty.

It was mentioned in the Times that Rev. BARRY was the preacher of Bishop CROSE, as well as of Bishop DOANE, and others; but this was a mistake. JOHN CROSE, afterward Bishop, received Deacon's orders in 1790. Mr. BARRY did not come to this country until several years later.

Where Should American Sympathy be in the Present Posture of the Franco-Prussian Struggle.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Are we to have another coalition, or rather another conspiracy of monarchs against republican aspirations like the one against the French Republic in 1792? The late action of the King of Prussia, in refusing to recognize the de facto Government of France, and the utterances of the official Journal de St. Petersburg, as given in the TIMES of yesterday, Sept. 12, would seem to point that way. The overshadowing position to which Prussia has suddenly attained seems far less formidable to sister monarchies than a great Republic of so warlike and intelligent a people as that of the French at their very doors. Among the extraordinary political, social and religious phenomena of this nineteenth century, the most prolific in wonderful results in every intellectual department, in the traditions of mankind, none are more so, from their contrasts with the past, than the attempt of the moment to bring before the tribunal of public opinion the doctrines of the divine right of kings on the one hand, and that of papal infallibility on the other. One the counterpart of the other, and neither more than a mere brutum fulmen, but when they go hand in hand. For each overrides every other consideration, and it would be no incongruous sight, as resulting from the two, to see the head of the Church of Rome walking arm in arm, for mutual support, with the head of Protestant Germany, WILLIAM I. of Prussia.

As Americans—at least such of us as can estimate the value of the term American citizenship—there cannot be, or certainly ought not to be, any question as to where our political sympathies should lie, when the struggle now going forward becomes one between Prussia as a monarchy and France as a republic, particularly if the contest is to be narrowed to one between the two political systems represented in it. So long as the war on the part of Prussia was against Cæsarism, as represented by NAPOLEON III., few thoughtful men could do otherwise than wish success to the Prussian arms, as the representative of a higher order of civil and religious liberty than its opponent. It was difficult, in such a conjuncture of things to separate the French people from their ruler, who seemed as eager as he "to try conclusions" with Prussia; for whatever was aggressive in his acts was applauded, apparently, to the echo by them. LOVE AND MURDER.

The Greene-Street Tragedy—Inquest by Coroner Keenan—Testimony of the Bar-Keeper and others—The Verdict.

Coroner KEENAN yesterday held an inquest at the City Hall in the case of BELLA HOUSMADE, who was shot by WM. MARSH, at No. 161 Greene-street, on the 6th inst. There were very few present. Three of the girls who were detained as witnesses were present. They were very young, and one of them evinced much sorrow for the position in which she found herself.

MICHAEL D. PHILIPS was called, and testified: I reside at No. 161 Greene-street, and was bar-tender for deceased, who kept the house; the affair happened last Friday week, between nine and eleven o'clock that night; I was in the bar-room a gentleman friend of MARSH'S had asked for a small bottle of wine; the deceased and two or three girls were there; I went to a closet to get the bottle of wine; MARSH, who had been out in the yard, came in and put his hand on deceased's shoulder, and asked BELLA, are you doing this? She answered, O No, your gentleman friend is." MARSH pushed the man, whose name is GULICK, aside and sat between him and the girl and stood close to her; then he put his hand behind him and drew out a pistol; deceased pushed it back; I heard a shot immediately, but did not see it fired; then I heard a second almost a second after; I looked and saw him put the pistol to his forehead and shoot himself; he fell on the bar-room floor; I ran out, and seeing a police officer ran in; did him this man had shot the woman; I first saw MARSH that day about ten o'clock A. M.; he used to visit frequently while deceased kept the house, during a period extending over eight weeks; he came the morning of the day of the tragedy, at about ten o'clock, with two friends; they left about seven P. M., and returned separately between nine and ten in the evening; deceased came in last, and alone; he sat in the yard for some time; he had been drinking wine nearly all day; I never knew of anything unpleasant, either from jealousy or other causes, existing between deceased and MARSH.

HENRY B. GULICK was next called and testified: I reside at Willett's Point, and am an artificer in Company C; MARSH was an artificer in Company B, and also a post messenger; on Friday, Sept. 9, we started from the Point, MARSH, GULICK and myself, at an early hour; GULICK and I came down in the train and met MARSH, who came by the boat about eleven o'clock, on the corner of Greene and Houston streets; at the Army Building; we went out to 161 and went together, we took a hack and went to Florence's saloon, thence to the St. Nicholas; I left them and went off to several places, and, returning, met the other boys at No. 161 present at two o'clock P.M.; we stayed there until past seven o'clock; we returned to Florence's again, thence to BROWN'S faro-bank, on Broadway, coming back to No. 161 Greene-street between nine and ten o'clock; MARSH, who had left us during the evening, met us; I went upstairs, pulled off my coat and shoes, and ordered some wine in the bar-room; that was about ten o'clock; I stepped out of the room into the hallway, and while there heard two shots fired; one of the girls said he had shot BELLA; there was such a screaming and noise going on that I didn't hear the third; deceased told me, in the afternoon, when I met him upstairs, that he had invested eight hundred dollars in this business, and that he had been informed by a friend that BELLA was trying to beat him out of the whole of it; he said, I am done with her now, and would shoot her;" I told him it didn't suppose he would shoot anybody; I don't know where he got the pistol.

LIZZIE STEPHENS, of Newark, N. J., testified: I live at No. 161 Greene-street; I had come there that afternoon for the first time; I didn't know MARSH, but I saw him sitting in Miss BELLA'S room in the afternoon; I was down stairs in the evening and saw MARSH come into the bar-room about half-past nine; there were three other girls there; we afterward went to the bar to have some wine; MARSH entered, and asked BELLA what she was doing; she answered as stated by former witness; MARSH drew a pistol from his pocket slowly and the next thing I knew, he shot her in the abdomen; I didn't see any pistol at all; I ran upstairs after I saw her fall and told another girl that MARSH had shot BELLA; I heard two more shots as I was going upstairs; I do not know why he shot her; when I came down again I saw MARSH lying on the floor and BELLA being carried up to her room.

Capt. J. MCDONALD testified that on the night in question, between 10 and 11 o'clock, he was at the Eighth Precinct Station-house, he went to No. 161 Greene-street, where he found BELLA lying on the sofa in the front parlor and MARSH on the floor; both were suffering from pistol-shot wounds; MARSH had shot her, and he acknowledged having done so, without assigning any reason for his action; the Captain ordered him under arrest; while at the station deceased gave a statement; he came the morning of the day of the tragedy, at about ten o'clock, with two friends; they left about seven P. M., and returned separately between nine and ten in the evening; deceased came in last, and alone; he sat in the yard for some time; he had been drinking wine nearly all day; I never knew of anything unpleasant, either from jealousy or other causes, existing between deceased and MARSH.

HENRY B. GULICK was next called and testified: I reside at Willett's Point, and am an artificer in Company C; MARSH was an artificer in Company B, and also a post messenger; on Friday, Sept. 9, we started from the Point, MARSH, GULICK and myself, at an early hour; GULICK and I came down in the train and met MARSH, who came by the boat about eleven o'clock, on the corner of Greene and Houston streets; at the Army Building; we went out to 161 and went together, we took a hack and went to Florence's saloon, thence to the St. Nicholas; I left them and went off to several places, and, returning, met the other boys at No. 161 present at two o'clock P.M.; we stayed there until past seven o'clock; we returned to Florence's again, thence to BROWN'S faro-bank, on Broadway, coming back to No. 161 Greene-street between nine and ten o'clock; MARSH, who had left us during the evening, met us; I went upstairs, pulled off my coat and shoes, and ordered some wine in the bar-room; that was about ten o'clock; I stepped out of the room into the hallway, and while there heard two shots fired; one of the girls said he had shot BELLA; there was such a screaming and noise going on that I didn't hear the third; deceased told me, in the afternoon, when I met him upstairs, that he had invested eight hundred dollars in this business, and that he had been informed by a friend that BELLA was trying to beat him out of the whole of it; he said, I am done with her now, and would shoot her;" I told him I

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

The Prussians have appeared on the heights of Villeneuve and Bruneo, in the environs of Paris, and cannonading has been heard in the direction of Forts Ivry and Charenton, on the south and south-east of the city, forming part of the external line of defense. It is reported that there was a fight yesterday in the woods of Clamart and Meudon, which are on the south-west of Paris, between the Prussians and three French regiments of the line, assisted by some battalions of Mobiles and a battery of artillery, and it is further said that the result was favorable to the French.

It was given out on Saturday, at the office of the French Secretary of the Interior, now at Tours, that the Prussians had crossed the Seine with fifty cannon. Malhouse and Cernay are now occupied by the enemy, and so also are Villers Cotterets and Nanteuil. The Northern Railroad, leading from Orleans to Paris, has been cut between Ablon and Juvisy, about eight miles south of Paris, and the railway to Leon is now entirely in the possession of the Prussians. At Juvisy the Prussians have planted a battery. In this direction heavy firing has been heard. At Ris, another small town on the Orleans road, the line has also been cut. Here there has been sharp fighting. The fort at Vincennes has been destroyed, the position being considered untenable. The report that the siege train of the Prussians is fast in the mud in the Canal de la Marne au Rhin is again circulated. If this is true, the beginning of serious operations will be considerably delayed.

The prospects of peace are regarded as brighter now than ever before. Yesterday we published dispatches stating that Lord LYONS had gone to the Prussian head-quarters, and that JULES FAVRE was to meet BISMARCK with specific propositions; and this morning we present dispatches stating that Lord LYONS is conducting negotiations between FAVRE and BISMARCK, and that a brief armistice has already been arranged. Our London correspondent telegraphs that the fact that BISMARCK receives FAVRE informally is regarded there as indicating a disposition of the King to relax the rigor of his demands.

The mission of the French fleet has utterly failed. Commander WILLAUMEZ complains that all the promises made to him by the Minister of Marine, when the fleet left Cherbourg, have been broken. He was assured that several armor-clad ships would follow him at brief intervals, and that a fleet of transports, with a force of thirty or forty thousand troops, for land service, would speedily join him. Nothing of the kind has been done, and his position has been a difficult and dangerous one. Kiel was not attacked, because the forts commanding the entrance are situated so high that they could not be reached by the ships' guns, and the bay is filled with torpedoes, and has been made unnavigable by the sinking of vessels connected by chain cables. Iron-clads, recalled from the Baltic and North Seas, are to protect Cherbourg, Havre and the other ports.

A Bonapartist plot has been discovered in Paris, and several of the old Police, and a nephew of Ex-Prefect of the Seine, PIETRI, have been arrested on the charge of being concerned in it. The price of butchers' meat in Paris has been fixed by official decree—that of the best cuts at twenty-one cents per pound. The wines and provisions found in the Imperial palace are to be distributed to the ambulances. Minister WASHBURNE has advised the Americans who have determined to remain in the city during the siege to keep within their own apartments, and not to neglect to conspicuously display the American flag.

Our London correspondent telegraphs that the explosion at Leon was caused by a guard of the magazine. So the commandant has been exonerated from the charge.....Gen. ULRICH, the heroic commander at Strasbourg, telegraphs to the War Department that he can hold out but a short time longer.....An attempt has been made by a German apprentice to assassinate NAPOLEON at Wilhelmshoehe—that is, the fellow has been arrested with a pistol on his person, which he boldly declared he designed using to kill the Emperor.....Tours is now the actual seat of Government. The corps diplomatic arrived there yesterday.....A large number of Zouaves have gone from Dublin to join the French Armies.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

Baron VON ARNIM, on behalf of the Pope, has explained to Gen. CADORNA that foreign forces ruled Rome, and it was impossible to prevent resistance to the entrance of the Italian troops. A delay of twenty-four hours was asked that additional influence might be brought to bear on his Holiness. The attack was accordingly suspended, but the troops already encircle the city. The latest advices say that the Pope and the diplomatic corps have taken refuge in the castle of St. Angelo, and the capitulation of the city is hourly expected.....The vomito has broken out at Barcelona, Spain, and the Government has sent a commission to investigate it.

The Germans in Our Political Campaign.

There can be no question that the Republican Party are to gain, in the approaching political campaign, an important German vote. We hear on every side that the German-Americans, who have hitherto been members of the Democratic Party, have become disgusted with the course of the Democratic leaders and journals on the Franco-German question, and are coming over in large numbers to the Republican side. It is well understood by them, that the leading organs of the Democratic Party have assailed the cause of the "Fatherland" with every weapon of sarcasm and abuse. The World has never ceased vilifying the motives of the Germans, and using every possible argument to draw American sympathy from the Prussians. The Republican journals on the other hand, have almost unanimously sympathised with the struggle for German unity. From the beginning, they have condemned the means which LOUIS NAPOLEON used to acquire power, and the oppression he has exercised over free thought and personal liberty. They opposed him when seeking to acquire a foothold for imperialist ideas in Mexico, and would undoubtedly have urged the nation to war rather than submit to a permanent French occupation of that unfortunate country.

When NAPOLEON, on the 15th of July last, began his sudden and uncalled-for war against North Germany, the Republican public men and newspapers felt and denounced it as an unprovoked attack on a peaceful neighbor; they regarded the struggle as in fact one between Cæsarism on one side, and a people just beginning a course of constitutional liberty on the other. Between NAPOLEON and King WILLIAM, personally, they had not much to choose, but one represented despotic ideas, and the other for the moment the mighty efforts of a free community toward unity, which we know from experience to be the path to liberty. Moreover, Germany embodied, to our minds, the freer ideas of the age; freedom of thought and constitutional progress; its army was a citizen army, and its strength, like our own, lay in popular education. Its Teutonic virtues were our own pains-taking industry, a pure family life, and the courage which, though not often brilliant, grows firmer from disaster. These were some of the reasons which brought the Republican Party into sympathy with Germany in this great struggle. The sympathy would have been equally deep and honest had no German-Americans existed.

But we rejoice at the coincidence, because it shows, what all reflecting persons have long felt, that for a German-American to be a "Democrat" is an inconsistency, both logical and unnatural. The two really have nothing to do with one another. The American Democrat has always sympathised with arbitrary power. He ought to be called the American Tory, or Junker. He has a secret love for DISRAELI, and a fellow feeling for LOUIS NAPOLEON. He adored the slaveholder. The German-American is of necessity a hater of tyrants and an enemy of oppression. The Democrat flatters the priesthood and believes in the temporal power of the Pope. The German (even if a Roman Catholic) would overthrow both. The American Democrat hates new ideas and "reforms," and always opposes any great popular measure, whether sanitary or moral, which will make the masses more intelligent or comfortable. The German believes in progress and popular improvement, and the elevation of the masses. The Democrat dislikes free schools, and would make them ecclesiastical. The German admires them, and would secularize the church schools. The Democrat has no ideas or a single principle in his party, and merely clings to a great name. The German is in sympathy with all the fermenting ideas of the time, and does not at once recognise that the sacred name of "Democrat" in America is but a lion's skin.

This war has revealed these incongruities in the position of German-Americans within the Democratic Party. They see they are strangers there. They are in the wrong place. What can a German "Democrat," who has fed, as upon mother's milk, on ideas of liberty for all men, and of the progress of humanity, have to do with men whose idol was the slaveholder, who admire LOUIS NAPOLEON, and whose only aim is so to beguile an ignorant populace, as to enjoy fat offices.

The true democrats of the United States are the Republicans. Their career has been a glorious series of struggles and victories for the rights of man. They have always upheld the people against oppressors in any form. Their animating enthusiasm has been their love of freedom, and sympathy everywhere with true liberty. To them, the German-Americans rightly belong; in their ranks, they will find a true harmony, and nowhere will their principles and services be so gratefully and heartily recognised, as in the Republican Party.

The Future of Spain.

So all-absorbing are the details of the Franco-Prussian war, that European telegraphers have of late ignored with almost curious persistency the events transpiring in the Iberian peninsula. The course pursued by the Spanish people, in view of the French defeats, happens to possess such great interest for all who desire to see republican institutions established in the States of Continental Europe, that this silence is most unsatisfactory. The position of affairs, as described in the latest advices, appears to be this: The people generally are in favor of a republic, but prefer a prolongation of the Regency, as now administered, until certain that their action will not be interfered with by Prussia. Gen. PRIM and the Regent, on the other hand, disposed to re-establish a monarchy, are restrained from overt action, partly by an uncertainty as to the support they will receive from King WILLIAM, and partly by a knowledge that the least spark will fire the train of republicanism. In the latter case, if not aided from without, their power and projects will vanish into thin air. The General, very foolishly, made a diplomatic move, which has not tended to increase popular faith in his intentions. Before the decisive successes now enjoyed by Prussia had been achieved, he sent an envoy to Count BISMARCK to inquire whether he would be disposed, as he professed the Spanish Government was desirous he should be, to recognise Prince HOHENZOLLERN's claims; but he has also been in communication with the Ex-Queen ISABELLA, urging her to allow Prince ALPHONSE of BOURBON to return to Madrid, promising in such a case to secure his eventual coronation as King of Spain. In singular contradiction to these steps, he has been heard to use language implying that he has considerable sympathy with the Republicans. Thus Bourbonist, Republican, and supporter of the Hohenzollern interest by turns, he is, naturally enough, looked upon with suspicion by each party, and is fast losing the position to which his undoubted ability had raised him as virtual dictator of the Kingdom.

But Spain is suffering from other internal disorders than those arising from the differences between Republicans and Monarchists. The ubiquitous Carlists are doing their best to take advantage of the disturbed condition of affairs, and, while effecting nothing of importance, continue to keep up a perpetual guerrilla warfare which harasses the Provisional Government, and destroys the security of the districts in which they appear. In any case the peasantry are sure to suffer, whether suppressing or resisting these unwelcome marauders. But a few days since a body of Carlist troops was captured near Navarre, and a band who attempted to destroy a railroad in Biscay were put to flight by the Government troops. Yet the same telegram informs us that they were still in force at Caballas, in the Basque provinces, and likely to cause some trouble. It is impossible to feel any sympathy with these reckless disturbers of the peace, to whom any Government is alike distasteful which does not hold out hopes for their own leader. In addition to all this, the adherents of the Duke of MONTPENSIER have got up a small conspiracy on his account; and at feud with all parties are the brigands who infest certain districts, plundering and murdering without discrimination. Well may Spain exclaim, "Despotism before anarchy!"

A late telegram contained the brief intimation that "a crisis in the Spanish Ministry is imminent." No particulars are given which would enable us to judge of its gravity. But it is safe to conclude that the issue is, or soon must be, that of republicanism against monarchism—of the populace will against that of Prim and his colleagues. Perhaps it is too much to hope there will not be this willful [illegible] that to all [illegible] overawe those who desire to see free institutions take root among the nations of Europe will await fresh intelligence of the Spanish crisis with great interest.

The Blunder of the Brooklyn Supervisors.

Brooklyn, in spite of its nearness to New-York and the ready communication it will have with the business part of this City when the East River Bridge is finished, seems to be an undesirable place for real estate owners. The taxes have always been relatively higher there than here, notwithstanding all the plundering our City Treasury has had to endure; and the probability is that this year they will be still higher. This is no new charge against Brooklyn, but it has hitherto been answered by the assertion that though the rate of taxation is higher, it is on an assessed value of one-half the actual worth of real estate, while in New-York property is assessed at fully two-thirds of its salable worth. There was some force in this argument so long as it was true, but it is true no longer. The valuation in Brooklyn has been raised. It was found there last year that in order to raise money to cover Municipal expenses it would be necessary to levy a tax of four per cent. on all taxable property. It was thought, however, that such a high rate of taxation might alarm property-holders, and thereby work injury to the city. To avert this, the happy thought dawned upon the Assessors of raising the nominal value of all lots and houses in the city, and thus keeping down the rate; and this was actually done. The State Assessors were disposed to make a corresponding increase in the valuation of Kings County on their books, but when it was explained to them that no new property had been built in the county or added to it, they consented to leave the State assessment as it had been previously.

This year, however, the Controller returns the valuation of Kings County as two hundred and eight millions, being an increase of about fifty millions over the valuation of the previous year! The Supervisors paid no particular attention to the matter until it was too late. They have only recently realized their duty in regard to it. But, though they sent a committee to Albany to obtain the same reduction that was granted last year, the State Assessors have only consented to take off fourteen millions from their first valuation. There seems, therefore, to be a prospect of increased taxation for Brooklyn. The Eagle declares that if the rate of taxation by the State is the same this year as it was last, "instead of $198,000 school tax, we shall have to pay $241,000; instead of $675,000 State tax proper, as last year, we shall this year have to pay $848,750." The same paper also, in speaking of the City Budget for the ensuing year, stated recently that whereas the amount required was last year only seven millions, it would foot up a round ten millions for the ensuing year. Another interesting item for tax-payers.

This increase in its rate of taxation will be decidedly detrimental to Brooklyn, because adding to the already heavy burden which its real estate is compelled to carry. In this City there is so much taxable personal property and so many large corporations are taxed on their capital at the same rate as real estate, that the latter is not overburdened. In the City of Churches, however, there is comparatively little personal property to be taxed, and those corporate companies, not banking institutions, now there that can move to New-York will be likely to do so, in order to escape these heavy taxes,—keeping only branch offices in Brooklyn. If the Board of Supervisors of Kings County had done their duty, they might have saved their county from this extra charge, as the increased valuation by the State Assessors was made public in the Controller's report which appeared last January.

As the Mayor of Brooklyn and a majority of its Municipal authorities are Democrats, it will be well for the Republican voters to remember at the polls next November to whom they owe this increased taxation. Although chiefly governed by Democrats, they are not so much in the power of their rulers on the other side of the river as we who sit in the shadow of Tammany. By making a proper use of these blunders, therefore, the Republicans of Kings may this year elect their candidates to many of the most important places in the City Government.

Life-Insurance Litigation.

Another life-insurance company appears in the law Courts to resist a claim arising under one of its policies. This time it is a New-York company; and the ground on which the claim is disputed is, that the person whose life was insured was killed by an accident resulting from intoxication, although in applying for the insurance he alleged, as part of the basis of the contract, that he was not addicted to intoxication or to the habitual use of intoxicating liquors. The case came up in the Court of Common Pleas, on Friday, in a technical shape,—the plaintiff asking that so much of the answer of the Company as related to the manner of death might be stricken out. Judge DALY's compliance with the motion is sustained by the obvious reason that the warranty which entered into the contract was affirmatory, and related only to facts existing at the time. This is common sense as well as law. The questions asked when an insurance is applied for are designed to satisfy the company as to the eligibility of the life. They cover the condition, the habits and relationships, but have nothing to do with the future except so far as that may be inferred from the present and the past. The possibility of divergence in the matter of habit, or of change in the matter of health, is one of the risks to be encountered by the company, and one that is supposed to be provided for in the calculation of premiums.

Our purpose, however, is to direct attention to the increasing frequency of litigation in connection with life-insurance. Scarcely a month passes in which a company does not appear as defendant in a suit brought to recover the amount insured on the life of some person deceased. Now and then these suits disappear at long intervals—a circumstance that indicates the tenacity with which companies fight the parties who seek to recover from them sums promised by the policies. One of these long-contested cases, recently decided, arose out of the default of the insured in respect of the payment of premiums,—and properly ended in favor of the Company. But as a rule, the companies rely upon a plea of falsity of statement, suppression of some material fact, or fraud, on the part of the insured, at the time the policy was issued. It is quite probable that the plea is, in many instances, tenable. There is an inclination among large numbers to withhold from a company information essential to its guidance; and not seldom there is a degree of deception which a loose medical examination greatly facilitates.

But if misstatements are often resorted to by individuals seeking insurance, or if fraud is often employed without scruple where corporate funds are concerned, we must remember that the companies themselves are largely to blame. They do not sufficiently discriminate in the acceptance of lives. Keen competition for business has begotten a certain recklessness in its pursuit. Agents earn enormous commissions easily, without pausing to consider the eligibility of the risk they procure. A large proportion of the medical referees are utterly unfit to conduct a searching examination, while another large proportion, we fear, are careless, not to say corrupt. Again, the inquiries addressed to friends are treated by the companies as little more than a formality, instead of being a very important means of verifying the applicant's representations. Much of all this is, as we have said, attributable to a wild desire for business. Much also is traceable to the reliance which the companies place upon the warranty which underlies the contract, and upon the protection which is thus secured through the law.

Here it is that the companies are in the wrong. Their duty is to institute the fullest possible investigation before issuing a policy, or while the insured yet lives,—not to reserve the scrutiny until the insured ceases to be able to vindicate his statements. A life-insurance policy should be in its way as good as a Government bond: it should be a valid promise to pay, on which the insured and his family might rely with unwavering confidence. If it have not this characteristic, it is a delusion and a snare; the money paid as premiums might be more profitably deposited in a savings-bank. There is no reason why this absolute certainty should not be attainable. If the companies will exercise more care at the outset,—if they will place more reliance upon the employment of trustworthy agents and capable medical officers, and of the means they possess for testing the truthfulness of the applicants' statements,—they will have less occasion for invoking the aid of lawyers to combat the claims of widows and orphans. Unless indisputability can be introduced into a life-insurance policy, that instrument will lose much of its value.

American Absentees.

The banishment of Americans from Paris on account of the siege may be but temporary, and, for the sake of the new-born Republic or of humanity, we cordially wish it may prove so. But in the interest of our traveling countrymen themselves and of the homes they desert, we might well desire the event to be otherwise. An indefinite postponement of the renewal of Parisian delights would, we are sure, do our absentees no harm. That usually luxurious capital may in one sense be the Paradise of good Americans, but it is to be feared that too often in another it has proved their Eblis. The opportunity afforded by the advance of King WILLIAM's iron battalions for taking into serious consideration the effect of Paris on American morals and manners, should not be lost sight of. For many years the amount of American time and money spent in that city has probably exceeded the aggregate of both expended in all other European capitals. How far the outlay has been useful, or the reverse, constitutes a legitimate inquiry.

We presume that, without implying Pharisaeism in the observer, it may be fairly said that the majority of people who sojourn long in Paris become looser of morals as well as lighter of purse. It may be possible to touch pitch and not be defiled. It is less easy to dwell many days amid a remarkably sensual people,—a people whose strong appetite for pleasure has long been stimulated by the policy of their Government,—without taking on some of the same luxurious proclivities. Habits of extravagance are adopted with like facility. The American who has lived in Paris may be more a man of the world than when he went there, but neither his intellectual nor his moral fibre is apt to be strengthened by the experience. In many cases one of the results is that of making him discontented with his own country. He finds the society, the literature, the cuisine of home, alike distasteful to him. He compares the old and the new, to the disadvantage of the latter,—falls into the common error of thinking the personal comfort or taste of the few a matter of greater consequence than the liberty and equal rights of the whole, crumbles a little—and goes back again.

In Ireland it has been the complaint of centuries that the money made on the soil has not been spent there. The landlords have taken their rents to support themselves in London or other places where the society has been more to their fancy. A striking consequence of this has been that, as with land where the manure produced by its crops is not returned to it, the country has been more and more impoverished. With a nation so rich as our own, and in which the evil has been on a lesser relative scale, such injury is not so material. Still it exists, and is by no means to be left out of the account by those who would arrive at an approximate estimate of the effect of such habits. A certain number of thousands of dollars—perhaps millions would be the exacter units of measurement—are or have been expended yearly by American residents and sojourners in Paris. Of course if this money were spent at home the country would be by just so much the richer.

The political disadvantage is perhaps more serious than the pecuniary or even the social one. Dissatisfaction with republican government, and a craving for the pomp and glitter of imperialism, have usually been brought away by Americans from Paris as regularly as a taste for French cooking or knickknacks from the Palais Royal. So customary has this been, that before a returned native opens his mouth, in nine cases out of ten we know that he will revile democracy and praise the order, the splendor and the comfort of the Empire. That such animadversions or comparisons are not often favorably received, is a fact which does not altogether destroy their effect. Advocates of republicanism have remarked from time immemorial how the monarchical principle, like vice, is apt to be "first endured, then pitied, then embraced." Recent events, indeed, may cool the ardor of American Imperialists; but there is no absolute certainty as to when they may have in Paris a fresh object of admiration to dazzle and mislead them.

So far as opportunities for æsthetic development or means of physical comfort go, we are really getting in most respects to a point which will warrant us ere long in believing ourselves abreast of Paris, or of any other European city. It is in these points only that we have hitherto been inferior, and they have, therefore, furnished our absentees with their soundest plea of justification. Let us hope that in all the appliances of a true and progressive civilization in art as well as in all healthful refinement, the great cities of the United States may soon equal, if they cannot surpass, the beautiful and unfortunate capital that to American eyes has had such transcendent charms. When this is done our people of wealth and leisure will cease, we may trust, to seek for advantages abroad that can be more conveniently and patriotically enjoyed at home.

The rumors of peace negotiations continue to be as uncertain as the advance of the hostile army is unmistakable and well defined. The occupation of the heights of Villeneuve and Bruneo by the Prussians; the abandonment and destruction of the antiquated fort of Vincennes by the French, and the statement of hard fighting yesterday and Saturday around Paris, all point to an early attack in force upon the outer line of defenses, and cast discredit upon the rumored armistice. The position of Gen. DUCROT, with eighty thousand men in the woods of Meudon, shows the determination on the part of the besieged to retard as effectually as they can, the formation of the Prussian line of attack. While keenly desirous of peace, the Provisional Government is evidently conscious of the fact that a display of weakness will only serve to make the conqueror more exacting, and the resolute attitude of the capital, however much its necessity may be deplored, must rouse, if anything will, the united energies of the French people, and render them worthy of their Republican predecessors of 1792.

The dream of Italian patriots is close to its realization. Rome is about to become the capital of a united Italy. A year ago the event would have been watched with eager interest by the whole civilized world. Today its proportions are dwarfed by the greater drama which is being transacted on the banks of the Seine. It is not the first time in the history of the Papacy that the guns of St. Angelo have become the guardians of the head of the Church, but no Pope ever retired behind those frowning battlements with a darker presage of coming disaster than does PIO NONO. The populace are ready to fraternize with the Italian troops, there is disunion and distrust among the Papal soldiery, the eldest son of the Church is a prisoner, and no power in Europe will strike a single blow to avert the imminent extinction of the temporalities of the Holy See. Devout Catholics may believe that the Church will be stronger and purer from her exclusively spiritual eminence than she has ever been when holding a double sceptre. It may be safely presumed that thier opinion is not shared by the Pope himself.

Mr. WASHBURNE, the United States Minister to Paris, may have offended somewhat against the rigid etiquette of diplomacy, by the warmth with which he greeted the Republic of France, and the earnestness with which he deplored the continuance of the war. But his words, however warm, reflected correctly the feeling which has sprung up in this country since France discarded NAPOLEON and his dynasty, and once more appealed to the liberty-loving instincts of its people. The coldness which has characterised some of the European monarchies in regard to the change, the ill-concealed aversion which is apparent in other quarters, and the huckstering, soulless course pursued by England,—are so many reasons for greater cordiality and positiveness on the part of this country. We can readily believe, therefore, that Mr. WASHBURNE's action is heartily sustained by the President and the State Department, and we are sure that it has the approval of the great body of the American people.

When the Prussian investment of Paris shall have fairly commenced, reliable news will necessarily become fragmentary and uncertain. A troop of Uhlans can effectually sever in a single day the telegraphic communication between the capital and the outer world. Many of the wires are subterranean, but the Prussians are, without a doubt, as correctly informed about their position as they are on every other point of French topography. The Prussians, it is true, carry with them a staff of electricians, who stretch along every mile traversed by the army the wires that connect it with Berlin and the German arsenals. But the Prussian official dispatches, however accurate, cannot, to judge by past experience, be expected to be copious. This will be no obstacle to imaginative chroniclers in London and elsewhere giving elaborate details of the progress of hostilities, but it will certainly diminish the amount of available facts.

Should the present negotiations for peace have a successful termination, the internal politics of Germany will divide the interest of Europe with the completion of the republican revolution in France. The first indication we have of the feeling in South Germany with regard to union is that Bavaria is disinclined to enter into the Confederation. The strong pro-Prussian tendencies of Baden are well known; Wurtemberg will probably be found quite disposed to link her fortunes with those of North Germany; and the three duchies can only follow the example of their larger neighbors. But as Bavaria is really at the head of South Germany, as her population and territory are more than equal to the other five States combined, and as her exertions during the present war have been probably greater than those of any other Power except it be Prussia, her reported halting in the path of union has an important bearing on the future of Germany. It is extremely probable that the royal and official republication of a dispatch for which the Court and Ministry. These are well known to be strongly molded by Austrian and Catholic influence, both of which are naturally opposed to Prussian ascendency. The Bavarian people have, in common with the rest of Germany, come through the baptism of fire that so often attends a nation's birth, and their will is, in this instance, likely to prove stronger than that of their rulers.

There is a Southern Democracy which the fire-eaters do not control. The Louisiana Democratic State Convention, sitting at New-Orleans, the other day, decided, by what the Times of that city calls an overwhelming majority, on admitting colored delegates to full participation in the proceedings. "Nine-tenths of the parishes," we are told, "voted in favor of the proposition," which practically commits the Democrats of Louisiana to the recognition of negro enfranchisement and the measures which that involves. It is a sign of progress which we are glad to chronicle. We expect, however, to see the brethren of Louisiana excommunicated as base-born heretics by the irreconcilables of Alabama and the fools of Indiana,—both of whom still cry out that this Government is for white men only.

The corrected and official statement of the number of French troops who capitulated at Sedan, throws a new light upon the resources still available for the defense of France, and affords a very suggestive commentary on the statements transmitted by certain correspondents. Assuming MCMAHON to have led 120,000 men into the Argonne, and taking the losses of four days' fighting on the Meuse and before Sedan to have been 30,000 men, we have still, after deducting the 30,000 who gave themselves up, an army of 40,000, a large proportion of whom probably occupy Sedan, while the remainder have made good their retreat to Paris. BAZAINE's lately reported presence at Sedan thus assumes a new significance, and in conjunction with the 6,000 men whom CANROBERT led out of Metz, the troops still on the Meuse may be able to do effective service in interrupting the Prussian lines of communication, and necessitating the employment of a considerable body of troops to watch them. The veracious correspondent who has sent so many startling tales from "the King's head-quarters," boldly asserted that 100,000 men capitulated at Sedan. As the correct statement comes from the Prussian head-quarters, a discerning public will probably conclude that a writer distinguished for apocryphal interviews, and equally apocryphal news, might as easily date his dispatches much nearer home.

Iowa still covers its name with disgrace by facilitating resistance to judgments of the United States Circuit Court, providing for the collection in certain counties of sums required to pay bonds issued by them in aid of railroads. Muscatine and Louisa Counties are particularly compromised by repudiation, but the whole State suffers because of the facilities its Courts have afforded for dishonest and shameless opposition to the discharge of just debts. An application has been made to Justice MILLER, of the United States Supreme Court, and of the Circuit Court of the United States for Iowa, for an injunction to prevent the requisite collections by the Marshal. Every point raised was, however, decided adversely by Judge MILLER. And now the Louisa County repudiators formally make known their purpose to resist the collections ordered by the Court! It was in reference to these cases that President GRANT, writing to Gen. DIX, asserted his determination to employ whatever force might be required to enforce the law. The Louisa County tax-payers have raised an issue that must be met; and we doubt not that the Federal authority will meet it in the only satisfactory way. Iowa may be reconciled to its disgrace,—but its creditors are entitled to their money.

While the cohesion of a united Germany has grown with every day of the prosecution of a common warfare, the unification of Austria seems to be as distant as ever. The advisers of FRANCIS JOSEPH are sufficiently acute statesmen to know that troubled days await the Empire in the immediate future. When the Main ceases to be anything more than a geographical limit, there will be considerable danger that the Inn and the mountains of Bohemia should, in like manner, no longer divide different nations. Every effort was made to induce the Czech Deputies, who are elected by the non-German populace of Bohemia, but who refuse to sit till national autonomy is conceded to them, to enter the Reichsrath just opened. It seems, however, that the Emperor has still to lament, in his speech at the opening, the still imperfect representation. The Austrian Cabinet has before it the awkward alternative of either embracing the centralist or German policy, and alienating the nationalities, or of persevering in their endeavor to conciliate the latter, and so throwing their German population into the arms of Prussia. The probable creation of a German Empire, extending from the Inn to the Vosges, will render the task of holding the balance even much more difficult than ever.

The foreign sympathies of the Democracy are all-embracing, if the Illinois State Convention may be accepted as an exponent of the party's views. In their earnestness to extend a "hearty welcome" to Republican France, the Illinois Democrats actually declared that they "commend the Administration of the Federal Government for the recognition so far accorded to the French Republic." The Germans also receive their share of compliment, which takes the shape of "heartiest good wishes" for "their endeavor to bring about a united country," and congratulation "on their valiant conduct in the pending war." The insurgent Cubans are not forgotten; and as for Ireland, the Convention asserted that it is "not unmindful of the people" of that island, or "of the wrongs they have been called upon to endure." Nay, further, the Convention expresses the hope "that the tocsin of liberty now sounding has struck the hour of their redemption," which should be nonsensical enough to please every Fenian. It is evident from these citations that the Illinois Democrats attach great importance to the foreign policy of their party, and are determined that there shall be no mistake about it. Perhaps to their anxiety to be explicit upon these points should be ascribed their silence in regard to certain domestic questions, concerning which there has been much controversy. It is unfortunate that before traveling round the globe with their sympathies on their sleeves, they did not take time to tell the country what they think about reconstruction, the constitutional amendments, and cognate questions. If they consider these "dead issues," why not say so?

AMUSEMENTS.

Theatrical.

THE SEASON AT WALLACK'S.

We observe that the Fall and Winter performances at Wallack's Theatre will be commenced on Monday evening next. An admirable representation of "The Rivals" is then to be given, for we cannot imagine that so strong a distribution of parts as the bill makes clear will suffer the claim of the entertainment to such a designation to be ineffectual. It will be given, let us say, in a new theatre. The work of renovation now being completed is, indeed, of the most complete kind. Entrances, auditorium and stage are being transformed alike by carpenters, machinists, painters and upholsterers. The result of the toil of these worthy people, whose plans were long ago submitted to Mr. LESTER WALLACK, and modified and approved by him, will, from present looks, be most gratifying. The main road of entry is being frescoed, as to the walls, in lavender shades enriched with crimson, panelings, with ornamental escutcheons, forming the larger features of the design; panelings of blue will adorn the ceiling. The walls of the vestibule and inner lobby are being done in drab and blue. The blue, by the way, is a new tint, which a special and unvarying hue by day and night makes worth noticing. Within, a thorough redecoration of the auditorium awaits the eye. The large designs which lately caused the parquet to appear smaller than it in reality was, have vanished, and a rich tapestry of scarlet and gold on a leathern material, with illuminated borders, and a wainscoting of jasper marble and gold, in moldings of walnut, have replaced them. For beauty of color and novelty of construction, no upholsterers' contribution toward the showiness and newness of the interior arrangements of a theatre which we can remember equals this one, in the Pompeian style, and the most recent production of Messrs. SOLOMON & HART. There is no need, of course, to mention the now accomplished incident of repainted and regilded pillars, seats and balcony iron-work. But it is to be observed that two large chandeliers have been introduced into the parquet, depending from above, and that the number of lights rescuing that part of the place from gloom has been augmented by one-half. Lifting one's head from amid the orchestra chairs, a newly-built dome is perceived. It is sixteen feet in height, and sixteen feet in diameter, the interior being a firmament of blue bespangled with gold stars, and illumed by 100 jets of flame. Bright panelings surround the dome, which will confer too much light and ventilation upon the spectators to be unheeded. The stage has been relaid from the footlights to the rear wall of the building. The proscenium has been enlarged by the removal of belittling upper corners, and greatly improved by the changing of the white pillar on either side into a smooth shaft of jasper marble, in alto-relievo, on a concave recess hung with golden cloth. A new drop, finally, is at present receiving the finishing touches of Mr. JOHN HILLYARD, Jr. Its aspect will furnish positive relief after years of contemplation everywhere of the familiar red drapery. From between folds of crimson velvet, gathered up on the sides, a curtain of rare white lace, with an ornate medallion in the centre, manifies another curtain of silk, whereof the color is Solferino lake. The border is of gold fringe. We have only to add to this outline of the labor now being performed for the benefit of Wallack's Theatre, and to be ended before the approaching week sets in, that the scenery to be used will come direct from the paint-room.

TO-NIGHT—ANNOUNCEMENTS.

In addition to the Nilsson concert to-night, a change of performance at Wood's Museum, with Mrs. SCOTT-SIDDONS as Rosalind, in "As You Like It," is to be noted. A partial change of bill at LINA EDWIN'S will bring before the audience Mr. STUART ROBSON in the burletta of "Camille."

Musical.

NILSSON CONCERTS.

The first of the Nilsson concerts occurs at Steinway Hall this evening. Mlle. NILSSON will sing "Angels Ever Bright and Fair," the "Mad Scene" from "Hamlet," and "Ah! Fors'elin," from "La Traviata." Miss CARY'S solo piece will be "Ah! Quel Giorno," from "Semiramide," while Signor BRIGNOLI will interpret "La Spia," by ARDITI, and Signor VERGER will render the romance in the third act of "Un Ballo." M. VIEUXTEMPS is to contribute two compositions of his own to the entertainment. We mention, of course, but a portion of the attractions of the bill.

GERMAN OPERA.

"The Huguenots" will be sung in German, to-night, by the artists of the Stadt Theatre.

Marie Seebach.

Mme. MARIE SEEBACH, with her suite and dramatic company, arrived here, yesterday, in the Iowa. She was received on her arrival by Mr. GRAU, and conducted at once to the apartments that had been secured for her at the Belvidere House. Her debut in America will probably take place on Thursday evening of this week, at the French Theatre, on Fourteenth-street. The sale of tickets for the opening performance begins this morning. Just at this moment an outline of the life and deeds of this artist will, perhaps, interest our readers, and it is, therefore, subjoined:

MARIE SEEBACH was born on the 24th of February, 1837, at Riga, in Russia. Her parents—both Germans—were opera singers. Her father was the son of a physician, who, though distinguished in the medical profession, had yielded to an overpowering love for the actor's art, thrown "physic to the dogs," and adopted the calling of the stage. Her mother was the daughter of Herr BLUMAUER, an author of much local distinction in his time, and a gentleman of fine imagination, delicate sensibility, and liberal culture. Both parents were honored in private life and admired as artists. The mother was the intimate and cherished friend of HENRIETTA SONTAG—beautiful, gifted, deeply loved and sadly lamented—with whom, at the Conservatory of Prague, she had won the first prize for proficiency in the elements of music. She died when her daughter MARIE was only six years old, while her second daughter, WILHELMINA, was yet an infant. The father, FREDERICK WILLIAM SEEBACH, survived his wife twenty-one years, dying at Cologne, in 1864. He was an honorary citizen of that place, and he is still remembered there, not only as the admired favorite of the stage, but as the upright and simple-hearted gentleman, who, with devoted love and faithful care, made every possible effort and sacrifice for the education of his daughters, striving to be both mother and father to the little ones so grievously bereaved.

After the death of MARIE'S mother, in 1843, the little girls were, for a time, necessarily intrusted to the care of strangers, for their poor father was compelled to travel about from stage to stage to earn their living. At last, however, good fortune intervened to put an end to his wanderings. He obtained a permanent position at Cologne, and there, as previously noticed, his daughters were reared and educated.

Care was the early friend of MARIE SEEBACH—a rough friend always, but sometimes a kind one. "Sweet are the uses of adversity." While yet a little girl, MARIE had to take upon herself much thought, anxiety and work for her father and her younger sister. She saw that the cost of tuition for her sister and herself was a sore burden to their hard-working father. This burden she strove to lighten, not only by attending to home duties, but by privately giving singing lessons, for each of which she received two and-a half silver groschen—between two and three cents of our currency. All this time her young heart was all aglow with one aspiration—to be a singer. But her very zeal defeated her ambition. The indefatigable industry with which she worked, the pressure of domestic toil, and the mental anxiety and distress that she endured, retarded the quiet and natural development of her constitution, and consequently of her singing voice. In despair, the brave, faithful, affectionate child gave up her studies of music, and turned to other pursuits. At first she thought of turning governess. A rich family in Cologne had advertised for such a fixture, and MARIE was on the point of making for the situation, when her father suddenly announced his intent to take her with him to Nuremberg, where he had accepted the office of stage manager and singing comedian, at a theatre managed by Mr. FERDINAND ROEDER. Thither, accordingly, she went, and there she resolved to adopt the profession of the stage. An arrangement was soon effected. During a brief probationary period she played without compensation; but, after a short trial, she was found to be both talented and useful, and Herr ROEDER thereupon engaged her at a monthly salary of five florins—two dollars in gold. The first fruit of her industry was a black velvet dress, which cost six gold dollars; and no fairy princess was ever gayer or prouder than little MARIE SEEBACH in her well-earned finery.

One hour of much greater happiness, however, was soon to come to the gifted child. She had been reciting the balcony scene in SHAKESPEARE'S "Romeo and Juliet," with her father and Herr ROEDER for an audience. Both were pleased, and MARIE overheard ROEDER say to his old friend SEEBACH, "Your MARIE will be the first Juliet of the world!" This success was typical of many child-triumphs. The Press of Nuremberg had already called attention to the rich promise of this golden-haired and bright-faced girl, and had greeted her "with great prediction of noble having and of royal hope." But the purity and simplicity of her nature was in no wise damaged by these airy auguries. Modest, sincere, devoted—loving art with all her soul, and following it with all her strength—she had no ear for flattery and no room for vanity, but seemed to know, by intuitive perception, that no lasting triumphs in art are ever gained without long and patient and soulful labor. "Art," she used to say, "is my betrothed." Art she loved, and for art she labored and waited. Nor did she wait in vain.

The next important step in her professional career was the securing of an engagement at Cassel, to which place she went from Nuremberg, to take the position of juvenile soubrette. It cost her a great deal of trouble to get this place; but things worth having generally cost trouble, and the effort in her case was immediately rewarded.

Shortly after she proceeded to Hamburg, and applied to the celebrated manager, Dr. MAURICH, for an engagement to act "star" parts, "guest" parts the Germans call them, because the "star" actor comes in the relation of a guest, and the application was favorably considered. Within four weeks after she left Cassel she appeared in Hamburg. At the former place she had amused and charmed the people by acting such parts as Juste, in the Berlin burlesque of "Cook and Hen." At the latter she began her engagement as Marguerite, in GOETHE'S "Faust," and in that character she created such a profound impression that, immediately after her first performance of it, Dr. MAURICH engaged her for a term of two years. She had taken the town by storm; and the lustre of her representation was not in the least impaired even in the street with the famous Mephistopheles of HEINRICH MARR.

To Vienna she was bound, however, and at Vienna she remained. Her sojourn here lasted for two years, and into these years were crowded a great deal of labor, progress and happiness. Under the energetic and liberal leadership of LAUBE, her genius found the amplest scope and the freeest action. Not an obstacle was thrown in her path. She wished to free the stage from the fetters of tradition, and she found the way clear and smooth before her. Veterans in acting—Anschutz, Latroche, Joseph Wagner, Fichtner, Lowe, Julie Rettich and others—had banished the pathway of art with the briars of precedent. These she cut ruthlessly away, and so led the spirit of the drama, in that epoch, from artifice to nature. And while she won the admiration of the public, who only saw her subordinate acting, she grappled to her soul, with hooks of steel, the friendship of all who came to know her as a woman.

The two years that MARIE SEEBACH passed in Vienna were among the happiest of her life. To this day the Vienna public is remembered by her with kindness, gratitude and esteem; and to this day the actress is held by that public in enthusiastic and delighted recollection.

During the vacations which she enjoyed while at the Hofburg Theatre, she visited and played in other great cities and important towns in Germany; and every where her efforts were rewarded with abundant prosperity. In Prague and in Graz she received, from the civic authorities and the artists' unions, golden and silver laurel wreaths, as souvenirs of popular appreciation. At Pesth a torch-light procession marched forth to do her honor. At Leipsic the Schiller Society made her an honorary member of its august and exclusive body. In Coburg-Gotha, the Duke decorated her with the medal of merit for art and science; and it is worthy of note that she is the first lady who has ever been permitted to wear that medal as a decoration in ribbon. Thus in all directions did the voice of popular applause and the verdict of critical authority and royal favor set the seal of authenticity on the judgment which in Vienna had accepted MARIE SEEBACH as one of the greatest actresses of her country in the present generation.

Wealth and honor have waited on her steps. Criticism has awarded her a place among the best and most famous dramatic artists in the world. She is in the prime of life and the zenith of reputation. It is natural that she should desire to repeat upon the stage of America the toil and the triumph that have made her eminent on the stage of Europe. That desire leads her to these shores. She comes hither under auspices of the most hopeful and promising character. To Mr. GRAU'S sagacity and enterprise our stage is indebted for the great RISTORI—the RACHEL of Italy, in grandeur and in fame. To the same wise forethought and energy our stage will now owe the RACHEL of Germany, MARIE SEEBACH.

WASHINGTON.

Provision for an Election in Georgia—Surveys at the Isthmus—Political Prospects in Ohio—Admission of a Woman into the Typographical Union.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—Information from Atlanta, Ga., is to the effect that the Republican majority in the Legislature, co-operating with Attorney-General AKERMAN and Gov. BULLOCK, will provide for an election in that State before the 1st of January, 1871, which will be a literal compliance with the generally understood interpretation of the act of Congress admitting Georgia to the Union, but sad experience has demonstrated that the Election laws of Georgia, being those bequeathed to the State by her Confederate rulers, are wholly insufficient to secure a fair and free expression of all the voters in the State. The violence, intimidation and murder which attended the campaign of 1868 are evidence of the much-needed reform in this respect, and it is a good sign that Attorney-General AKERMAN, who is still in Georgia, has been called upon to aid the Legislature in framing such laws as will, with the aid of the statutes passed at the last session of Congress, secure a fair election. This will necessitate a postponement of the election until the latter part of December, a time which will be more favorable for the colored voters, as at that period they are free from the restraint imposed by labor contracts.

SURVEYS AT THE ISTHMUS.

In addition to the expedition to survey the Tehuantepec and Nicaraguan routes for a ship-canal, for which Congress made an appropriation of $30,000, Lieut.-Commander SELFRIDGE will return to the Isthmus of Darien in November to complete the survey of all the possible routes for water transit in that region. The operations of Commander SELRIDGE'S party last Winter convinced them that a practicable canal passage was not likely to be found across Darien, but it is desired to settle the question absolutely by actual surveys, and the expedition will return for that purpose and explore some ground which they were unable to traverse last season.

REPUBLICAN PROSPECTS IN OHIO.

Gen. GARFIELD, who has been in the city for a few days, speaks quite confidently of the result of the approaching election in Ohio. He says the discussions thus far have caused the people to increase their appreciation of the work done by Congress at its late session, particularly the work of the last month, and that there is no reason to apprehend any material change from former elections. He regards it possible that the Republicans may lose one district in the State through divisions therein, but considers it equally possible that they may gain one of the Cincinnati districts now represented by a Democrat.

FEMALE MEMBER OF THE TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.

The Typographical Union of the District of Columbia last night unanimously admitted to membership a female compositor, Miss MARY C. GREEN, of Ohio, now employed at the Government Printing-office. The same Society have never yet been able to determine whether they will admit to like membership a son of FRED. DOUGLASS, who cannot change the color of his skin.

In August last, the safe of J. W. DODD, No. 179 Newark-avenue, Jersey City, was robbed of $226 by a negro named ROBERT FLEMING. The detectives have since been on his track, and on Friday Detectives CARROLL and STRATFORD, of the Jersey City force, succeeded in arresting him at Natick, Mass. He was brought to Jersey City and lodged in jail yesterday morning.

Temperance Political Meeting at Cooper Institute—Address of Hon. C. C. Leigh.

A meeting of the friends of temperance was held in Cooper Institute last evening for the purpose of listening to Hon. CHAS. C. LEIGH, candidate of the Anti-dram-shop Party for the office of Lieutenant-Governor, who was advertised to speak. Mr. ABRAM MERRITT, Jr., presided, and Mr. PHILLIP PHILLIPS varied the exercises by singing excellent temperance songs.

On being introduced to the audience Mr. LEIGH said he should relate the old story of the evils of intemperance. The dram-shop was the ource of poverty and crime; 15,000 of them are established by law in the State of New-York, and in the Metropolitan district they bring forth one murder every twenty-four hours. Again and again the friends of temperance had marshaled their hosts to overthrow this power for evil, and again and again had they been cheated. The Anti-dram-shop Party intended to establish no sumptuary law; they would have no committee to follow one who buys a keg or a bottle of intoxicating liquors, in order to see what is done with it; but simply protests against the cutting up of liquors in retail, in drams, and the offering of them, in this shape, for sale. Absolute prohibitory laws are incapable of being carried out in this country, and are founded on a false basis. The Anti-dram-shop Party interfered with no man's religion; it seeks to obtain the aid and assistance of all religions and sects. It seeks to suppress the dram-shop by law. Some say, Why not use moral suasion?" It has been used. But it can have effect only on men who have morals to be affected; it will be useless when the attempt is made on immoral men. It is not proposed, or expected, to make men temperate by law; all that is asked or expected is that the dram-shop shall be destroyed. The grog-shop is sustained and protected by law. The business differs from all others in this respect, because the State demands that all who wish to follow it shall have the great seal of the State to license him for the express purpose. Why do you organize a distinct party? say some. What else can the temperance men do? The pulpit, the rostrum, the Press, the influences of social life, all have been resorted to for the purpose of destroying the evil; party caucuses have been tried in order to put temperance men in nomination; men have gone down into the dirty pool of politics in order to effect this purpose—all of no avail. What, then, can temperance men do? The Democratic Party honestly and boldly avows its adherence to the largest liberty in favor of the sale of intoxicating liquors. The Republican Party has done absolutely nothing for the cause of temperance, although they have been in power for the past ten years. At the last Convention of that Party they passed a resolution declaring that as the legal voters of any town have the right to grant licenses for the sale of liquors, the Legislature should have the right to prohibit it. What do they mean by "they should?" The right to prohibit is now the law of the State, passed by a Democratic Legislature, and signed by a Democratic Governor, and yet the Republican Party, presuming on the ignorance of the temperance people, bring forward such a resolution as this, thinking they will be satisfied, and will go to the polls and vote their ticket. Both the Republican and the Democratic Parties are thanked for what they have done in the past, but no party can live simply on its past history of good deeds. We have now the question to be decided—the destruction of the dram-shop is demanded, and if the Republican Party will aid the temperance people in this, they may depend on their votes; but if they do not, then the friends of temperance will trust to their own efforts. The Anti-dram-shop Party has a distinct issue, while in neither of the platforms of the two great parties is there anything more than allusions to the past. The whole question is now narrowed down to a struggle for office between those that are out and those that are in; and in this great battle the leaders of both parties will have, in many instances, coalesced and shared the plunder. The Anti-corn League in England, after carrying their point, became a Reform Party, and after making England almost a Republic, they have become an Anti-dram-shop Party. We should follow their example; and now, having established manhood suffrage, we should go further, and seek to overthrow the greatest of all evils—the dram-shop. The existence of the dram-shop is dangerous to our very political institutions. In these places the machinery of politics is put in motion. The dram-seller is the only man in the country who violate the law with impunity. Were it not for their influence we should not have men in the Legislature who can be bribed and bought—we should have passed no Erie bill, an enactment which has done more than anything else to ruin American securities abroad. But for the hope of having the aid of the dram-shop influence, able and talented gentlemen who has achieved high office and hopes for still higher, would never have dared to sign such a bill. When the dram-seller asks anything, the men in office knowing where the power that nominated them is placed, dare not refuse it. The dram-shop must and will go down or our liberties are gone. The speaker said he had confidence enough in the American people to believe, that when this issue comes fairly up, their influence will be on the side of liberty. To the calculating person who asks, "How can you succeed?" he would say, the religious masses, the temperance masses, and the tax-payers will be on the side of the anti-dram-shop party. The wives and mothers of the land will use their influence in favor of that party's success; and with these forces on their side, and God on their side, this curse of all curses will be put an end to.

Mr. MERRITT announced that the meetings would be held at Cooper Institute every Sunday evening until further notice, and that on Sunday evening next, Mr. E. Z. C. JUDSON (Ned Buntline) will make an address. After further singing by Mr. PHILLIPS, the meeting adjourned.

The Campaign Among the Germans.

By the formation of the German Central Campaign Club of this City by the German Republican Central Committee, the campaign among our German fellow-citizens has been fairly opened. The numerous German district campaign organizations which are now in the course of formation in all parts of the City will give strength to the movement among the Germans of all parties in favor of the Saratoga nomination. A large portion of the German voters, who heretofore have cast their votes in favor of the Democratic Party, have evinced a determination to sever their connection with a party principally composed of an element which is in open sympathy with the national and hereditary enemy of Germany. This determination on the part of the majority of the intelligent German voters has been made apparent by the movement among the Germans of the Twenty-second Ward, where, without distinction of party, a strong Woodford and Kaufman Campaign Club has been organized under favorable auspices, and by the proceedings of the German Republican Central Committee on Friday evening. The German Central Campaign Club was formed on a broad basis, with a view to not merely representing the German Republicans, but the great majority of independent German voters, who will no longer affiliate with the Democratic Party.

The new German Central Campaign Club, which, no doubt, will soon be in working order, invites all intelligent German voters to join the organization, to crush "the rotten and corrupt Tammany Hall regency, who, aided by political 'Turcos,' have for many years ruled with an iron hand this great commercial emporium, and who have succeeded by the most palpable frauds at the ballot-box" in keeping their ill-gotten power. A vigorous campaign among our German fellow-citizens may be expected.

Twentieth Assembly District Boys in Blue.

At a meeting of the "Boys in Blue," Twentieth Assembly District, held at DINGLEDEIN'S No. 1,000 Third-avenue, on Saturday evening, 17th inst., Capt. WM. H. BENJAMIN in the chair, the following officers were elected: Capt. JOHN OSBORN, President; First-Lieut. Reuben Parkhurst, Secretary; Capt. William H. Benjamin, Commandant; First-Lieut. Fred. Lowe, First-Lieutenant; First-Lieut. Samuel Smith, Second-Lieutenant; Serg't Patrick Quinn, First-Sergeant; Capt. Thomas Scanlon, Capt. George P. McCarthy, Capt. N. H. Babcock, Delegates to Central Committee.

The Political Situation in the Fifth New-Jersey Congressional District.

In the Fifth Congressional District of New-Jersey, which comprises Hudson County and Newark, three candidates for Congress are now in the field. They are GEORGE A. HALSEY, Republican; ORESTES CLEVELAND, regular Democratic, and ÆNEAS FITZPATRICK, the candidate of the "Young Democracy." Before the close of the present week there will probably be a fourth aspirant for Congressional honors. In the Convention that nominated Mr. HALSEY, there were several dissatisfied delegates—men who worked hard for the nomination of E. K. PANGBORN, the editor of the Jersey City Journal, and only failed of success by a few votes. They are loud in their complaints of unfair play. A convention has now been called, to-morrow in Newark on Tuesday evening, for the purpose of protesting formally against the action of the Bergen Convention, and of putting a new candidate in nomination. It was reported yesterday that a delegation of Newark Republicans had offered the nomination to Mayor PANGBORN, but this rumor is pronounced untrue upon the best authority, and there is no likelihood that such a nomination would be accepted.

The district at the last election, in 1868, gave over 2,000 Democratic majority; but since the passage of the Fifteenth Amendment a gain of 1,000 votes has probably been added to the Republican list, while the Democrats have to extend of the negro vote not more than 700.

MAINE.

The Congressional Riot—A Sketch of Their Services.

From the Lewiston Journal.

The Republicans of Maine have done honor to themselves and to the State, by returning not only a full Republican delegation to Congress, but also a delegation which for ability and efficiency will not be excelled by any other delegation. The solid vote for Representatives to Congress, also indicates better than the vote for any other candidates, more exactly the position of the State on national questions. Mr. LYNCH has 1,500 majority in the First District; Mr. PETT about 6,000 majority in the Second District; Mr. BLAINE about 5,000 in the Third District; Mr. PETERS about 2,500 in the Fourth District, and Mr. HALE about 1,000 in the Fifth District. Aggregate Republican majority on Congressmen, about 10,000. Two years ago, when the Republicans carried everything by storm, the Republican majorities in the several districts were: First District, 9,125; Second District, 4,600; Third District, 3,280; Fourth District, 4,839; Fifth District, 2,624.

The re-election of Hon JOHN LYNCH, from the First District, by so unexpected a majority, only shows that it needed as much activity among Republicans in other sections to bring up the Republican majority in the State to at least 13,000. Mr. LYNCH has already served six years in Congress with great ability and entire success. He is one of the most successful merchants in Portland.

Hon. WM. P. FRYE, who is returned from the Second District by a roaring majority, is the only new member from this State; but his long legislative experience and familiarity with parliamentary proceedings, his well-known ability and rare powers as a public speaker, will give him at once a commanding position in Congress. Mr. FRYE is about thirty-nine years of age, a graduate of Bowdoin of the Class of 1850, and one of the ablest and most successful lawyers in the State.

Hon. J. G. BLAINE is elected for the fifth time from the Third District, having been first elected to Congress in 1862. His long and successful career in Congress, and the almost unanimous voice with which he was called to the Speakership, indicates the high position which he holds among the Republicans of the nation, and show that the Third District has honored herself and the State, by keeping Mr. BLAINE in Congress.

Hon. JOHN A. PETERS is re-elected from the Fourth District by a large majority, although his majority is diminished somewhat by the fact that the Chamberlain movement in Bangor, by some mysterious process, threw a large part of the soldiers over to the support of MARSELLUS MERRY, a man who openly espoused the Southern Confederacy at the opening of the rebellion. Mr. PETERS is one of the ablest lawyers in the State, and has already made his mark in Congress.

The youngest member of the delegation is Hon. EUGENE HALE, who is re-elected from the Fifth District by a reduced but decisive majority. Mr. HALE is a native of Turner, in this county, and, although but thirty-five years of age, has already made his mark in the legal profession and in Congress.

THE VOTE FOR GOVERNOR.

The Portland Press of the 17th inst. says:

We have received returns of the vote cast for Governor in 366 towns, which have thrown 90,378 votes, against 87,079 last year—an increase this year of 3,299 votes.

The vote in these towns this year is: PERHAM, 49,170; ROBERTS, 41,068. Majority for PERHAM, 8,102. Last year CHAMBERLAIN had, in the same towns, 47,854; SMITH, 35,419; HICHBORN, 4,306. majority for CHAMBERLAIN, 7,629.

The towns to be heard from last year gave CHAMBERLAIN, 3,430; SMITH, 4,009; HICHBORN, 682. They will slightly reduce the majority for Mr. PERHAM, but we think it will be well up to 8,000.

THE EX-PRESIDENT.

Andrew Johnson at Gallatin—He Reviews and Defends His Policy in the Past—His Advice to Tennessee.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 18.—Ex-President ANDREW JOHNSON spoke at Gallatin last night, to a large audience. He briefly reviewed his public career since the commencement of the war, maintained his consistency, and claimed that he had voted uniformly for the good of the whole country. He referred to the principles on which the Federal Government was organized, and declared that they had been subverted since the war. He said he had always been a Democrat; he was elected Vice-President as a Union Democrat; and he had not and would not swerve from the true faith. He condemned the recent State Convention for ignorance. He then read a resolution adopted by the State Convention favoring a reunion of the Southern States to their rights as the sovereign States of the American Union, and said it was secession and revolution in disguise, and admonished the people against repeating the errors of the past civil strife. He recommended a close alliance with the national Democracy, and a choice of Governor, members of Congress and the Legislature, free from suspicion of secession. He condemned the State Convention for not disclaiming secession, and suggested the holding of a primary meeting to exhibit the tone of the State of Tennessee on that subject. He closed with an appeal for prudence and discretion, to keep off reconstruction and military rule.

At starting Marion ran upon Amber and threw his rider.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 18.—The race which was to have been rowed by picked crews of the Schuylkill Navy, and Nassau, of New-York, Boat Clubs, in four-oared shells on the Schuylkill, on Tuesday afternoon, has been postponed till Thursday afternoon, on account of a serious accident to one of the Navy crew. The race is to be on a straight way from the Falls down, and will come off between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

Defalcation in the Baltimore Custom-House—Accident to Pay-master-General Brice.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 18.—A Sunday paper this morning reports a defalcation in the Baltimore Custom-house by the Deputy Collector. Rumor to-night places the amount from $140,000 to $200,000. Investigation is being made by a special agent of the Treasury Department.... Pay-master-General BRICE, United States Army, was run over here by an express wagon last evening, and his right leg broken above the ankle.

Vomito in Spain—Health Officer of Barcelona a Victim.

MADRID, Sept. 18.—The vomito has broken out at Barcelona. There have already been ten deaths, including that of the Health Officer of the port. The Government have sent a commissioner to Barcelona to investigate the circumstances.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Sept. 18.—SOLOMON PHELPS' house and barn at Westfield were destroyed by fire this morning, together with 100 tons of hay and a large amount of corn. Loss $15,000; partially insured.

EVANS, Cal., Sept. 18.—WILLIAM HENRY was, today, detected in the act of committing rape upon the person of a little girl six years of age, and the daughter of Judge HARRIS, of this town. While being conveyed to the jail he was forcibly taken from the officers by a crowd of citizens and tarred and feathered and driven out of the town.

Arrest of a Notorious Counterfeiter.

Col. WHITLEY and his officers of the United States Secret Service, yesterday arrested, at the corner of Sixteenth-street and Third-avenue, WM. SHELLY, alias Charles Cooper, a notorious counterfeiter, who had in his possession excellently-executed counterfeit plates for the issue of the new fifteen-cents currency notes. SHELLY is said to have engraved these plates in the first instance for the notorious BILL GUERNEY, but owing to the arrest of that personage, they were not delivered, but remained in SHELLY'S hands, and he was endeavoring to dispose of them to some other quaceraman, when he and they fell into the clutches of the law. SHELLY has frequently been arrested before in the West, but has always managed to escape; but the evidences of his guilt being on the occasion found upon his person, it is thought he will have more difficulty in evading the penalties of his crime. In addition to the plates a fine set of engraver's tools was found in his house, at the corner of Graham-street and Van Cott-avenue, Brooklyn, which was searched after his arrest. The prisoner was locked up and will be arraigned before a United States commissioner this morning.

THE LATE DROUTH.

Injurious Results in the City and Vicinity—Wells, Springs and Rivers Dried Up—Sufferings of the Farmers—Destruction of Crops—Injury to Manufactures—The Public Health—The Markets, &c.

The distressing heat may be said to have at last ended. The rain-storm which commenced on Friday night effectually settled it, and how thankful all are for the change! However, there are people who now begin to growl because they have to cross the muddy streets, and because the wind makes too free with men's hats and ladies' dresses. How changed did everything about the streets of our City look yesterday, when one thinks of what it was two weeks ago. Then there was sweltering heat and flying volumes of dust. Saturday a cool, strong wind blew the rain straight in our faces and gave the thoroughfares that picturesque appearance, with which none are better acquainted in wet weather than New-Yorkers. The storm continued all day, and the rain scarcely ceased for five minutes; it came down in a continuous drizzle, and only assumed strength when the strong gusts of the storm blew it along. Foot passengers received the full benefit of the blast, and, although many tried the experiment of an umbrella, they found it a failure, and "let it down." The storm was very severe along West and South streets, where it blew with all the fury of a gale, and in many instances men who were engaged at work on the streets were obliged to desist. Almost all the employes of the Park Commissioners were obliged to suspend work, and many a poor man thus lost a day's pay, who could badly afford it.

While the inhabitants of the City were finding fault with the storm, the farmers in our immediate vicinity were loud in their expressions of delight at the advent of the rain. The storm gave them no trouble, but, on the contrary, brought much consolation, and was, indeed, much needed. This storm would appear not to be local, for vessels arrived at the port Saturday and yesterday experienced strong head winds the greater part of the passage from Europe. The steam-ship Erin, from Liverpool, encountered a violent gale on the 11th inst., and the Cleopatra, from Savannah, Ga., reports "heavy north-east gales and very heavy sea to Hatteras, since which time have had strong northerly winds."

The storm must, however, be regarded as a blessing, for the long-continued drouth was in various ways doing most serious injury to the country, and had it continued would have been attended with the most disastrous results. Not alone did the farmers feel its effects, but the inhabitants of large cities were becoming apprehensive of danger. When wells and springs and brooks dry up, it is time to consider the matter as serious. When the reservoirs that supply large cities with water begin to fall, then it is but wise to take precautions. When new insects appear to destroy the crops, it is time to become alarmed. We have just passed through such dangers, although many, who never gave it a thought, will think the assertion incredible; but it is not so. It is the fact, and can be proven to be such, throughout the whole portion of the country within a radius of thirty miles of New-York, the drouth was severely felt.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY

suffered very much. The first season of drouth this year may be said to have ended in the beginning of August, but the rains which closed it did not affect the springs; they only touched the surface. Then came the second dry season, which ended last Friday, and which the oldest farmers in Westchester County declare to have been the longest and severest they ever knew. Wells, springs and streams all fell lower than ever known before, and some dried up completely. This caused immense hardship to farmers, who were obliged to drive their cattle for miles to find water or else haul water a like distance to the cattle. Immense trouble and expense was of course the result, and in some cases the cattle suffered so severely as to reduce their value twenty-five and thirty per cent.

Near as Westchester is to us, but few knew of the trouble and loss entailed on the farming portion of its population. Why, it was a common sight during the season to see the farmers and their laborers filling barrels, by means of small buckets thrown over bridges into the brooks and streams that flowed beneath, and this sometimes at a distance of four or five miles from their farms.

Through the town of Westchester there flowed a brook whose waters never ceased running on steadily and quietly, like old Time himself, for over thirty years. This last drouth, however, did what thirty years failed to do, and the little stream ceased to run, for its waters had disappeared. There was one peculiar effect of the Summer or first drouth noticeable in Westchester and in other places, we believe—that is, that it arrested the growth of potatoes, and when the rain set in they commenced to grow again. They produced a second crop of small tubers, and in other cases the potatoes themselves sprouted.

The drouth did immense damage to the corn crop. The cases are numerous where it has been materially injured, and there have been some instances where it has been entirely burned up. Therefore, in view of such a terrific drouth as that we have just now passed through, the farmers had to postpone getting in their Winter grain until rain would begin to fall, for they were not willing to sow, fearing the seed might sprout and be burned. The present rain, however, has come in most opportune time. All through the country, yesterday, preparations were being made to take advantage of the opportunity offered of getting in all the wheat and rye on land that was in good condition.

The farmers of the district have indeed suffered much and been sorely harassed by the drouth. Citizens living in their mansions in the stone-paved streets know nothing of the hardships to which the farmer has been subjected; but it is to be hoped most fervently that their patience will never be put to such a test again. Before leaving Westchester, a very important matter cannot be omitted. Since the drouth commenced a new species of cabbage worm has made its appearance, and has been doing great injury to the cabbage; in fact, it is asserted by some of the farmers that it has destroyed the entire crop. Its appearance they attribute to the drouth.

STATEN ISLAND.

In Staten Island, both farmers and people living in the towns have suffered considerably. Staten Island, unlike New-York or Brooklyn, has no reservoir to get a supply of water from; her sole dependence rests on the wells and springs, which are plenty from one end to the other, and furnish excellent water. Within the past four weeks a great number of the wells ran dry. In the vicinity of New-Brighton, some that usually had eighteen feet of water have now dwindled down to two and three feet. It has been always a custom on the island that where a spring was on private grounds—in the yard or garden attached to a residence—to allow the people of the neighborhood who were less fortunate to draw from the well. As long as the spring supplied it liberally, the more drawn from it, the better was the water, and the one giving permission to his neighbor was thus benefited instead of being injured. Lately, however, many have been reluctantly obliged to withdraw the permission or put a limit to the amount of water drawn, which, it need not be told here, caused considerable hardship, especially among the poorer classes. Beyond the scarcity of water the inhabitants along the water boundary of Staten Island were not otherwise troubled with the drouth. Inland, however, it was felt most keenly, for here as well as in Westchester County, the cabbage worm was at his work, and injured every leaf above ground in the whole county. The corn suffered considerably, and the few cattle on the island knew what it was to be without water. In the vicinity of Richmond, New-Dorp and other places along the line of the railroad, the effects of the drouth are plainly visible. In many places the corn is burned, and the tops of the grass present a very unhealthy appearance. Touch the grass with one's foot and the earth beneath flies up in dust as fine as powder.

The roads are in a frightful condition with the dust, and none of them so bad as those that lead from Stapleton to Richmond, the county town. To drive along them is like driving through mud—and worse. There could not have been less than six inches of dust on them last Friday, and those who followed close on a wagon suffered the penalty by having clouds upon clouds of the finest powder blown into their eyes, nose and mouth. Saturday's rain, however, settled the matter, but not until late in the day. In the forenoon, notwithstanding the showers of the night before, the wind blew with such violence as to rise the dust in volumes, making the road almost as dark as night. The drouth has left its marks behind, and the rain now steps in as a most welcome visitor.

LONG ISLAND.

From the middle of April until the 7th of August there was no rain on the east end of the island, and but little fell in central and western portions. Since the 7th of August in no part of the island has any rain fallen. The consequence has been short crops of almost everything raised by the farmers. The hay crop being harvested first, suffered least. Although it has suffered with the rest of the crops in quantity, in quality it is considered above the average. The wheat crop is also above the average, and in some parts of the island better than for many years. The kernels are full and plump, injured by no rust, blight or weevil. The quantity, on account of the dry weather, the best judges say, will not be more than two-thirds of the average yield. Crops which have ripened in the second drouth have suffered the most. Corn, in some parts of the island, has been entirely destroyed. Through the Eastern towns the stalks of hundreds of fields do not reach to a man's shoulder, and many of them are the appearance of having been scorched by a fire. In low, wet districts, of course, corn has done better. Potatoes and roots of all descriptions have suffered, but not so much as corn. Potatoes are very small in size. Cabbages have suffered both from the dry weather and a worm. Fruit has been a failure, especially pears.

The farmers of the island have suffered in another manner. The immense tracts of pine woods in the central and eastern part of the island have been dried almost to tinder by the hot weather, consequently a large number of fires have raged in the woods, and among them two which have equaled any one of them, excelling any in the number of acres burnt over. The fire near Deer Park destroyed

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

Review for the Week Ending Saturday, Sept. 10—The Present Week.

There appeared to have been more briskness in the real estate market during the week than was apparent during the week ending Saturday, Sept. 10, so far, at least, as the Exchange gave any token as to the state of the business; but on reviewing the figures for the week, it turns out to be otherwise. Against sixty-one transfers, amounting in all to $1,369,083 for New-York, and 126 transfers, in money value $630,789, for Brooklyn, for that week, we have, as the transactions of the week ending on Saturday last, fifty-eight transfers for New-York and 113 for Brooklyn, in money valués of $1,128,349 and $603,386, respectively, giving us a difference between the transactions of the two weeks, and in favor of those of week before last of $346,734 for New-York and $227,603 for Brooklyn. The public sales at the Exchange were greater last week, however, than they were during the week previous, both as to number and property-values. The week ending Sept. 10 gave us only three sales, all made in one day, (by Messrs. ROBERTS & MCGUIRE,) amounting in value to $54,713; whereas, the week just closed gave us nine sales—three by Messrs. A. J. BLEECKER & SON, amounting to $80,450; one by MULLER, WILLIS & CO., amounting to $19,000; four by Messrs. FAIRCHILD, STEVENSON & CO., amounting to $56,175; and one by Messrs. ROBERTS & MCGUIRE, amounting to $11,000—in all, $139,625, or, in money value, $84,912 more than the sales of the week before last. This exhibit of the transactions at the Exchange does not show much improvement in the actual business, as most of it is done an private terms, and the transfer values have decreased; and if we even add the gross amount of these transfer values to those obtained at public sale, we still fall behind the week ending Sept. 10 in the sum of $160,822. Well-versed dealers declare, however, that this month is generally a backward one. Heavy speculators have only just returned from the country and are casting about for bargains—are, in fact, studying the chances for future operations; and, doubtless, when October is fairly set in, the market reports of the TIMES will tell a very different and far more interesting story than that we are now compelled to lay before our readers.

The following is a summary of the transfers for the past week, day by day, both in this City and Brooklyn:

	Transfers, New-York.	Transfers, Brooklyn.
Monday	13	$143,752	21 $206,900
Tuesday	6	58,650	18 110,950
Wednesday	9	254,600	18 41,578
Thursday	6	123,437	18 90,540
Friday	13	349,160	24 89,120
Saturday	11	186,750	14 80,081
Total	58	$1,123,349	113 $603,386

During the coming week there are valuable offerings to be made, which will doubtless induce a more than ordinary attendance of bidders.

Messrs. ROBERTS & MCGUIRE have bulletined improved property on Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets, 225 feet from Fifth avenue, to be sold on Tuesday, Sept. 20, by virtue of a judgment order of the Supreme Court, in a partition suit, GRATZ NATHAN, Esq., referee.

WILLIAM KENNELLY will, on Wednesday, Sept. 21, sell twelve valuable lots at Wilton, on the north side of One Hundred and Thirty-sixth-street, and south side of One Hundred and Thirty-seventh-street, between Boulevard and St. Ann's avenues. Each lot is 25 feet front and rear, and 105 feet deep. The location is a desirable one, adjoining the residence of D. SADLER, Esq., and about one mile from Harlem Bridge, Bold Boulevard and St. Ann's avenues are to be 100 feet wide.

ROBERTS & MCGUIRE will sell, by order of JOSEPH H. DUKE, Esq., referee, on Thursday, Sept. 22, an irregular plot of land on Third-avenue, between Eighty-sixth and Eighty-ninth streets, 36.5 feet from the corner of Eighty-eighth-street and Third-avenue, fronting on Third-avenue 100 feet, running parallel with Eighty-ninth-street 94.7 feet and with Eighty-eighth-street 100 feet, being 114 feet deep at its outermost point from Third-avenue.

It is expected that there will be spirited bidding on all this property, and especially on that in Seventeenth and Eighteenth-streets.

STEAMBOATS.

TO THE TRAVELING PUBLIC.
IMPORTANT INFORMATION.
In order to afford cheap communication between the cities of
NEW-YORK, ALBANY AND TROY, THE WEST AND NORTH,
The proprietors of the ALBANY AND TROY LINE,
comprising the large, fast and commodious steamers VANDERBILT AND CONNECTICUT, have decided to make a permanent reduction in the fares, and so classify the rates that no extra charges can be made for staterooms and berths.
OUR FARE TO ALBANY OR TROY.

Including whole state-room	$2 50
Including state-room accommodations	1 50
Including cabin passage or berths	1 00
Deck passage, without accommodations	50

PEOPLE'S ALBANY LINE.

Including state-rooms	$4 50
Fare and state-room berth	2 25
Fare and berth	2 50
Deck	1 50

HUDSON RIVER ROAD.

Fare and sleeping accommodations	$5 20
Palace-car	5 20
Passage without accommodations	3 20

Fare in sleeping-car, comparative with our whole route.....$2 70
Difference with one berth in room.....1 70
Without sleeping accommodations.....1 75
It is thus seen that every traveler is directly interested in supporting and encouraging us in affording, with first-class steamers, cheap communication. The steamers are 320 feet long, and over 1,000 tons burden; have very powerful engines and ENTIRELY NEW BOILERS, and considered the fastest night boats on the Hudson. No expense has been spared in furnishing and decorating the staterooms and cabins; over $150,000 has been expended for this purpose during the past year.
THEY LEAVE NEW-YORK FROM THEIR NEW DEPOT, PIER NO. 44,
Between Spring and Charlton sts., three blocks above Desbrosses-st. Ferry,
DAILY, SATURDAYS EXCEPTED, at 6 o'clock P. M.
Returning, leave Troy at 6, and Albany at 8 o'clock P. M., or on the arrival of the evening express train of cars from the North and West, arriving in New-York about 7 o'clock A. M. Tickets are sold and baggage checked to all points West and North. Passengers on the line of Susquehanna, New-York Central, and Northern Railroads will avail themselves of this route by purchasing their tickets for Albany, where our baggage-wagons will convey baggage free to boats.
FARES ON SUNDAYS SAME AS HERETOFORE.

THE WAR.

Paris, will appear in this city after today. M. CREMIEUX, the Minister of Justice, is lodged here at the residence of the Archbishop. There is a perfect understanding between them, which is considered as foreshadowing the union of all political parties for the national defense.

Advices received at the War Department show that great numbers of the French are emigrating.

STRASBOURG.

Progress of the Siege—Early Capitulation Probable—Cost of the Siege.

MINDELHEIM, Sept. 18.—It is officially reported that the works facing lunettes Nos. 52 and 53 of Strasbourg are finished. Near lunette No. 53 mines were exploded by the besieged, and the earthworks protecting the assailants were injured, but they have since been repaired. Colmar and Mulhausen are certainly occupied by the Baden [contingents, under Gen. HELLER.

PARIS, Sept. 17.—The commander of Strasbourg, Gen. ULRICH, telegraphs to the War Department that the situation of the city is continually growing desperate, necessitating his early capitulation.

COLOGNE, Sept. 17.—The Gazette, of this city, today has an editorial article giving the following interesting statistics and particulars: There are now before Strasbourg eighteen batteries of mortars and rifled cannon. These fire collectively more than 7,000 shots into the city every day. Thirty carloads of munitions of war, including 8,000 quintals of iron, are thus consumed daily.

Only 30,000 Instead of 100,000 Prisoners Taken at Sedan—Retirement of the French Ambassador from Madrid.

BERLIN, Sept. 18.—A telegram from the King's head-quarters makes a great reduction in the number of prisoners secured by the capitulation of Sedan. It states that the total number of men actually captured was only 30,000, including 39 Generals and 2,595 officers, 500 of whom were released on parole. The killed and wounded numbered 20,000.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—The Press of Paris, without exception, is opposed to the restoration of the BONAPARTES.

The French Institute, in the name of civilization, protests against the possible destruction, by bombardment, of the libraries, observatories, museums and galleries of Paris.

Baron MERCIER, the French Ambassador at Madrid, had an audience with the Regent, at which he announced his recall, and took formal leave.

The French mail, just received via Dover, contains nothing of a later date than Friday. Paris was then belligerent in feeling, although a conference between BISMARCK and FAVRE was anticipated. Fort Vincennes had been evacuated, and its guns had been brought within the walls.

Bavaria has repudiated any desire to enter the North German Confederation.

WARNING FROM BISMARCK TO A RHEIMS JOURNAL.

BISMARCK has sent a warning to the Independence, a journal of Rheims, to the effect that it must change its tone or it will be suppressed. The Paris Press protest with indignation against the act as an interference with the internal affairs of France, as well as a violation of the freedom of the Press.

French and Irish Meeting in St. Louis—Aid for the French.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 18.—The French and Irish citizens held a very large meeting today at Concordia Park, to raise funds and express their sympathy with the French people in their struggle for liberty. A procession a mile in length, composed of various civil societies and citizens generally, marched through the city, making a fine display. The park was densely crowded, there being no less than 10,000 people present. Speeches were made by prominent Irishmen and Frenchmen. Resolutions were unanimously adopted expressing a deep sympathy with the French people in their effort to throw off the yoke of despotism and establish a republic. A large sum of money was raised for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the deceased French.

CHURCH REOPENINGS.

Laborers for God—Opening Services in the Lexington-Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church.

Services were held in the Lexington-avenue Church yesterday for the first time since the Summer vacation. Rev. ROBERT STRATTON preached a sermon on the occasion from the words: "We are laborers together for God." After referring to the duty of Christians to labor for God, he said it was incumbent upon them to use all the appliances which the march of science has within our reach, to build up and advance the Kingdom of Christ. Each Christian was a laborer for his own salvation. "Work out your salvation" is the command of the Bible. God appeals to man's self-interest in thus commanding him to work out his own salvation. He places within man's reach to carve out his own spiritual destiny, God leaving it to him to become what he chooses to make himself, by using the moral influences placed within his reach. While man is under obligations to work out his own salvation, he is not to confine himself to individual salvation alone. Christianity, it is said, begins at home, but it must not remain there. It must go out from self, and seek the salvation of others. God has carved the stone out of the mountain, but it is for us to stand behind and around it, and assist to roll it on down the highway of time. We are also laborers together—notwithstanding differences in creed and church government, the Christian denominations are grand corps of the army of Christ, which as a grand unit is laboring for the glory and the extending of his kingdom. But not only do we labor for God, but we labor with God. Shall the Christian bare his breast to life's storms alone, and have none to dry the weeping eye, or stay the tottering steps? No. We labor with God. He accompanies the Christian in his labors, and by his grace, and the ordinances of his Church, soothes the sorrowing breast. He wipes the weeping eye, and stays by his faithful promises the believer's tottering steps. How consoling, then, is it that in our labors, whether in the ministry or as individual Christians, we are not called upon to tread the wine-press alone, but that God labors with us, and by us, and through us. Let us, then, he said in conclusion, be faithful and steadfast as laborers for God, consoled by the consciousness of His presence with us, and that He will at the last great day reward every one according to their deeds, whether they be evil.

The Jane-Street M. E. Church.

The Jane-street M. E. Church was reopened yesterday. The church and parsonage, which are situated between Greenwich-street and Eighth-avenue, have just been painted, making them appear as new. The class-rooms and lobbies have been cleaned, painted and varnished, and the walls calcimined. The Sunday-school and lecture-room have been greatly enlarged, painted, and the walls calcimined. The room, full fifty feet square, has been newly furnished with seats of the most modern and improved style. The altar has also been enlarged and refurnished. There were special services in the church Friday evening. The Sunday-school was opened at 9 A. M., yesterday.

The French Church of St. Esprit—Services in French and Spanish.

The Protestant Episcopal French Church du St. Esprit reopened yesterday after the recess of the Summer, and Rev. Mr. VERREN, the pastor, preached a sermon founded on the forty-second Psalm and fourth verse, "Wnat does thy God?" He regretted his inability to comment upon the painful state of affairs in Europe, as he did not consider the pulpit a fitting place for the subject. He drew the attention of the small congregation to the remarkable beauty of many passages of the Psalms, which he recited, and urged upon them the worship of God and obedience to His precepts, which the Psalms inculcated. He quoted David and Absalom as admirable examples of paternal and filial affection. He urged steadfastness in duty toward God, and enlarged upon the fortitude of the French Huguenots as examples. Notwithstanding the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and unsparing persecution on the part of their Catholic antagonists, they firmly adhered to their creed, and suffered banishment rather than recant. The short discourse ended with a prayer that God would give his children strength to obey his commands.

At the close of the French service an Episcopal service in Spanish was proceeded with, as customary, under the pastorship of Rev. Mr. PALMO, who subsequently preached a sermon. The church each morning accommodates a French and Cuban congregation, in turn.

HUNGARY AND AUSTRIA.

Their Religious History Sketched by a Hungarian Divine—Discourse of Rev. Dr. Koenig.

Rev. Dr. KOENIG, of Pesth, Hungary, delivered a discourse in the Madison-square Church, Rev. Dr. ADAMS', yesterday afternoon, on "The Religious History of Hungary and Austria."

The reverend Doctor was introduced by Dr. ADAMS, who stated that he had been engaged in the Protestant missionary field in Austria and Hungary, for many years, and left his field of labor to attend the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, which was to have been held in New-York this year, but which was postponed to next year, in consequence of the breaking out of the war on the Continent of Europe. Dr. KOENIG did not hear of the postponement until he arrived in England, and had there decided to continue his journey, and present the claims of the Protestant people of his native country to the people of the United States.

Dr. KOENIG, thus introduced, commenced his discourse by stating that he had been asked to give a brief account of the religious condition of Southern Europe. He said that he could not enter upon this matter without touching somewhat on the political element which is interwoven with the religious. The Lord Jesus when He was on earth spoke to His disciples of wars and commotions, and said that when these things came to pass they were to look up, for "the hour of your redemption draws nigh." The war which had been waged in Europe might be considered God's work, but apart from the purposes of God we should look for the cause of these commotions. The speaker then stated his conviction that the war was one of the means by which God intended to build up His Church among the nations of Europe. The speaker then proceeded to describe the field over which he had labored for so many years, as comprising the whole of Austria and Hungary, extending from the Baltic to the Black Sea, and, for a considerable time, he had taught in Constantinople. The Austrian Empire consisted of many countries, each having its own religious history peculiar to itself, and many of which were the scenes of that great religious awakening which swept over the land in the sixteenth century. There was also a history of this reformation in Italy and Spain, which was as important as that in Austria and Hungary. All through the sixteenth century the work of LUTHER made itself felt in Hungary especially, where his writings were read with avidity. At the beginning of the seventeenth century Hungary had made rapid advances toward Protestantism, and MAXIMILIAN II., from 1564 to 1576, had a strong leaning to the side of Protestantism. The scene subsequently changed to a darker page, and the enemies of the Protestants, in the seventeenth century, commenced their persecutions, which were carried on with vigor. At Prague the Protestant ministers were summoned by the authorities, and banished from the country. In Hungary also, was this the case. In 1600 the Protestant Church in Austria had ceased to exist. Here and there, however, were small companies who adhered to their faith, and, even while attending mass under compulsion, arranged to meet subsequently and read their Bibles, and worship according to Protestant forms.

The peace of Westphalia, after the Thirty Years' war, gave the Protestants equal rights with the Catholics, and this continued until JOSEPH of Austria restored the full rights to the Protestant community. As soon as the first rays of toleration broke over the land, the little Protestant communities, which had existed in secret, showed their heads. JOSEPH II. encouraged immigration to Germany, and in this way Protestants from other countries, speaking the German language, came in, settled among the native population and added to their strength. The population of Austria, a few years later, consisted of about nineteen millions, only 340,000 of whom were Protestants, and these were distributed over 321 congregations, which were very small in many cases and poor. The income of the ministers was inadequate to their support, in no instance exceeding four hundred dollars, and many not obtaining more than one hundred dollars, and even fifty dollars per year. The salary of the teachers was still lower. Under these circumstances the enemy attempted to sow dissensions, and succeeded.

Austria possesses only one college for the education of Protestant ministers, and in Bohemia there is but one for the instruction of teachers. There is a great lack of a free religious Press by which to disseminate the doctrines of the Protestant religion and awaken inquiry. In Vienna there are but two religious papers, and in Hungary, one in Pesth and another in a distant portion of the country. In Bohemia there are five. Even so late as 1843, if a man preached in his own house in Vienna he was compelled to pay a fine, and was prohibited from offending in that manner again. The power of Rome was broken in these countries after 1606 by the decree in relation to mixed marriages, permitting them to be performed by the civil authority when the priests of the Church of Rome refused to solemnize them; the educational system was also improved.

As to the progress of religious liberty in Hungary, the speaker said that it would be impossible to give an adequate idea of it in the time to which he was limited. The victory which Hungary has achieved in her political reconstruction is due to the power of her Protestant Church, and the Catholics are decidedly more tolerant in that country than in any other, and instances are known where Roman Catholic children are educated in Protestant schools, and even Catholic clergymen associate on terms of friendship with those of the Protestant denomination.

In conclusion the speaker said that Hungary is entitled to great credit for the stand she has taken in favor of the Protestant religion, and is deserving of assistance. He hoped to be able to awaken the religious people of this country to these facts, and to induce them to contribute liberally to the cause.

SOME FREE THINKING.

"The Issue With Superstition"—Discourse by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.

Rev. O. B. FROTHINGHAM delivered a discourse yesterday morning to the congregation that assembles in Lyric Hall, Sixth-avenue, upon the text found in the twenty-second and twenty-third verses of the seventeenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, being the words of Paul to the Athenians: "Ye men of Athens; I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious," &c., &c.

Correctly rendered, said the speaker, this passage should have read: "I perceive that in all things ye are 'religious.'" Paul designed to praise the Athenians, not to blame them. But the translators of the Bible could not find it in their hearts to say that the Pagan Greeks were religious. They believed none had the true religion but themselves. So they preferred to do violence to the Greek language and translate the word "superstitious," that really meant religious or pious. Superstition was regarded as a terrible thing all over the world, and all people were ready to suppose their neighbors were superstitious, but not themselves. Superstition was like the chills and fever or the gout—it was a terrible affliction on mankind, but no man ever had them. This was one reason why superstition was so hard to define—everybody being anxious to define himself out of it and to confine it to his neighbor. A common definition with the Church was that superstition was an unbelief in Scriptural things. Others defined it to be an excess of religion. Others call it the beginning of religion. But religion and superstition were two separate things, and were at war with each other all over the world. Superstition was irreligion; it was capriciousness and willfulness instead of reason. The German philosopher KANT came nearer the truth of the matter when he defined superstition to be the habit of regarding Nature and Nature's law as subject to capriciousness—the disregard of law in the natural world, the metaphysical world and the world of mind; a blind obedience to arbitrary authority. A good illustration of superstition was seen in the way the superstitious man looks at unusual phenomena in nature, such as a comet, an eclipse, a tornado, an earthquake, or the falling of a thunderbolt. Instead of tracing it to its cause and designating it in its order of natural phenomena, he drops on his knees. It seems to him to be a manifestation of wrath from heaven or hell. So he crosses himself, flies to a cavern, brings offerings of flowers or meat, perhaps of his own child, to appease the offended deity. On the introduction of chloroform, a few years ago, priests protested against it because it thwarted the purposes of the Almighty. It was only the other day that a Catholic Priest in Europe—he hoped there were none such in this country—bitterly inveighed against life insurance companies, on the ground that they were an attempt to balk God—a flying in the face of Divine Providence. Superstition concerned itself with days of the week. It was a tradition of the Church that Christ was crucified on Friday; therefore Friday is an accursed day. Let no house be built, no keel laid, no vessel launched, no great enterprise undertaken on Friday. Superstition had also seized on the Sabbath. That was a holy day—a day on which things essentially wholesome must not be done. All those laws that make things intrinsically right or wrong, good or evil, are to be suspended on that day. It had also seized upon the Bible, and even upon prayer. The superstitious man thinks to get by prayer what he cannot get by his own deserts. There was an Ex-President of the United States, a good man, honest, sincere, and pure in his private and public life, who, when he was laid on his death-bed, called for a minister, and expressed his desire to be sprinkled in baptism, hoping, as he said, that it was not too late. This strong, good man, when he came to breathe his last, had no faith in his virtue, his uprightness, his fidelity in public office, but in that supreme hour hoped to obtain by some miraculous grace hidden in a few drops of water, that which a well-spent and honorable life would not give him. So, too, in the communion service; it was believed that the eating of a bit of bread and the drinking of a little wine on the death-bed would secure salvation which a virtuous, upright and blameless life had failed to achieve. The Catholic Church teaches this continually and depends upon it; it is the very kernel of the whole establishment. It teaches that this bit of bread is the very substance of God, and that the faithful believer who partakes of it verily eats God. There was probably no better illustration of superstition than was afforded by this Catholic rite of the sacrament. Superstition had also seized on the name of Christ. It consisted not in ascribing to Him miraculous power over animate or inanimate nature, but in making Him the Savior—putting Him forward as a proxy through whose virtues, instead of his own, man was to be saved. A strange thing took place in New-York on the 24 day of August last. About the year 1200, (as the story runs,) a Catholic priest, named FRANCIS D'ASSISI, while at service in his chapel, was visited by the Virgin Mary and her son Jesus, who, after complimenting him for his good works and his devotion, expressed a wish to reward him by granting any request he might make. The modest priest, disavowing any merit for what he had done, merely requested that henceforth any person who, after being confessed by a priest, should partake of the sacrament in his chapel, should thereafter be absolved from all offenses, past, present and to come. The Virgin granted the request, and directed the priest to go to Rome and get the same confirmed by the Pope. He went to Rome, related the story, and had the edict of the Virgin confirmed. In the course of time permission was given to other churches of the Franciscan order to grant absolution on the same terms, and finally the privilege was conferred on all Franciscan churches throughout the world. The event which formed the basis of this extraordinary privilege was celebrated on the 24 of August last, in all the Franciscan churches of this City. The churches were crowded from morning till night, by people who came to take advantage of this promise, said to have been made 700 years ago by the Virgin Mary to St. FRANCIS D'ASSISI. Could superstition go further than this? No notice was taken of the celebration in this City, except a brief mention of the service in the newspapers, and yet it was an event of the most serious concern to the people of this City and country. These were things to be feared, not to be laughed at. Thus superstition was one of the most terrible foes to mankind; it always had been, and it always would be. In the Old World, where enlightenment and culture were confined to the few, it was not of so much consequence, but in a Republican society where every person counts one, and every man's voice goes to make up public opinion, superstition like this was a matter of the greatest concern to every well-wisher to his country. Where superstition begins, knowledge ends; there can be no science, no philosophy, no large intelligence where it exists. One of its worst effects was to make personal character impossible and of no account. If there was one absolute, indubitable truth in the universe, it was that every man would have to depend for salvation on what he is, in and of himself. It was his innate quality of truth, virtue, honesty, that would establish his place here and hereafter. But if a man was taught to believe he could save himself by going to a priest, sprinkling himself with holy water or eating wafers, he would take very little trouble to save himself by a life of virtue. It was for these reasons that he took issue with superstition in all its forms. The speaker closed by urging upon his hearers to combat every form of superstition, for it was only by believing that God's name is love that mankind could be elevated, society improved, and the human race advanced to that stage of enlightenment, prosperity and happiness which philanthropists so eagerly longed for.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Wate'-Street Home for Women—Services in the Chapel.

Services were held at the Water-street Home for Women, yesterday afternoon, and were well attended. The Home is located at No. 273 Water-street, occupying the building formerly in the possession of the notorious KIT BURNS. The upper portion of the structure is used as dormitories, and in what was once the bar religious services are now held. The dog-pit in the rear of the house has been fitted up as a kitchen. On Feb. 8 the Home was dedicated with appropriate religious services, and on the 10th of March following it was opened and placed under the charge of Mrs. ALICE HADLEY as Matron and Mr. HENRY LITTLE as Missionary. During the three months extending to June 7, seventy-two women, who had hitherto led an abandoned life and whose homes were among the worst dens of Water-street and its vicinity, were admitted to the institution. Of these thirty-three have been placed with Christian families, and two have been restored to their husbands. During the interviews, yesterday, Mr. LITTLE stated that the Home now contains about twelve inmates. At first, he said, out of those admitted not more than half a dozen ever seemed to feel the least interest in religious matters. They evidently looked to the Home merely as a refuge from the misery of the life they had been leading. This was rather discouraging. Now, however, it was quite different. Within the past few months the Spirit of the Lord seemed to have descended on the institution and to have favored it in a most remarkable manner. He had good reason to believe that every inmate of the Home was converted and felt a special interest in the salvation of her soul. They had many applications for admission to the institution, but they were compelled to refuse a large number of them, admitting those only that appeared to seek the Home as a refuge from sin rather than as a temporary stopping-place where they could obtain food and shelter. One of the inmates of the Home then stated that she had been there about six months and never had she known Christ, or felt the influence of the peace which trust in Him can confer until she came there. She blessed the day that she was led to the institution, and prayed fervently that all might find the peace she had found. The exercises concluded with prayer and singing.

The Home is supported by voluntary contributions, and and those desirous of aiding it should send their donations to Rev. WM. H. BOOLE, No. 233 East 50th-street, or to the institution.

Rebuilding the Catholic Churches of Charleston, S. C.

Right Rev. P. N. LYNCH, Catholic Bishop of the diocese of Charleston, S. C., preached yesterday in St. Patrick's Church, Kent-avenue, near Myrtle, Brooklyn, in aid of the fund now being raised to rebuild the Catholic religious edifices in Charleston, which were burned by the great fire in that city in 1863. In that conflagration the Catholic community lost almost every building they owned devoted to religious and charitable purposes. Their grand cathedral, the convent of the Sisters of Mercy, the Boys' Orphan Asylum, the Girls' Asylum, the Free School, the hospital—all fell before the ravages of the destroying element. In addition to this, the war has so impoverished the Catholics of the Charleston diocese, that they are unable to rebuild the institutions thus swept away. In order to assist them in so doing, the Bishop has felt it to be his duty to appeal to the charity of their more fortunate brethren in the North to give of their means in aid of the suffering ones of his flock; and his appeal at St. Patrick's, yesterday, met with a noble and generous response, as, in fact, did every call for any exercise of charity when presented to this congregation. St. Patrick's, it will be recollected, is the church in which over $500 was subscribed at one Sunday morning service in aid of the widows, orphans and other sufferers by the great calamity at Avondale, Penn., last year, where so many miners lost their lives.

Interesting Dedicatory Services in Newark Yesterday—Rededication of the Third Presbyterian Church.

The Third Presbyterian Church, of Newark, on Broad-street, was opened yesterday for the first time in nearly a year. In the meantime about $40,000 has been expended in refitting and refurnishing it, and though the exterior does not show that improved appearance which the money expended on it would warrant, yet the interior is beautifully finished, and does credit to the good taste of the architect. The pews are of blackwalnut, oiled, and neatly cushioned to compare with the carpet and the trimmings of the church. The seats of the singers and the new and beautiful organ, are in the rear of the pulpit, and a small gallery crosses the front end of the audience-room, in the place of the one formerly occupied by the choir. Rev. Dr. CRAVEN, the pastor, officiated.

In the afternoon many worshipers from other churches were present by invitation, and the exercises of dedication were continued.

Rev. Dr. STEARNS, of the First Church, made a very interesting and feeling address, and was followed by [Rev. WALTER CONDICT, pastor of Calvary Chapel, on Pennsylvania-avenue, which, in turn, is an offshoot of the Third Church. The audience in the afternoon filled the seats and aisles to overflowing.

Probable Murder in Seventy-Fourth-Street.

There has been an angry feeling for some time past between JACOB EUSTER, a German milk-man, thirty-six years of age, living in Seventy-fourth-street and First-avenue, and a man named BRENKLE, arising in alleged improper attentions upon the part of the latter toward the wife of EUSTER, who had at last forbidden BRENKLE to come to the house. This command the latter seems to have disregarded, and last evening again appeared at the house, but was prevented from entering by EUSTER, who then passed out to his stable, in the rear. He was followed by BRENKLE, and as he was entering the stable was suddenly assaulted by the latter, who plunged a knife into his back with such force that the point penetrated the lungs, inflicting a very dangerous, and probably fatal wound. Immediately after committing the crime, BRENKLE fled, and had not been found by the Police up to a late hour last night. The wounded man was taken to the Fifty-ninth-street Police Station, where his wound was dressed by Police Surgeon MCDONNELL, after which he was taken home.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

JOHN BARRY and a number of others were yesterday arraigned before Justice DOWLING at the Tombs, charged with having on Saturday night attacked and robbed JOHN EDDINGTON on the Battery. It appears that the deponent, with these men, employes on the MORRIS and ESSEX Railroad, came "on a lark" to this City. At night the others took $12 from him. They were committed.

On Thursday last, while some special officers of the Treasury were on the lookout near Sandy Hook, they approached the brig H. G. Berry, and when near her side perceived a very foul odor, which at first was supposed to come from the floating matter in the water. On boarding the vessel the smell became worse, and then the officers resolved on making search. They found the hatches opened fore and aft, and on entering the lower hold discovered the dead body of the late Captain of the brig stowed away among the sugar, which constituted the vessel's cargo. There was plenty of room to stow the box containing the remains above deck. It was ascertained that the Captain had died of cholera, and one of the crew died of yellow fever at Havana, and that another, suffering from the latter disease, was left in the hospital at that port. The body of the master was in a decomposed state. Affidavits relative to the affair have been sent to the authorities, but what action will be taken in relation to the cargo has not as yet been determined on. The remains of the Captain will be interred this morning at the Quarantine burying-ground, near Prince's Bay.

The steam-ship Crescent City, arrived at this port last evening from New-Orleans, met, near Cape Hatteras, the British bark Inez, in a disabled condition. The Captain of the bark signaled for assistance, and soon after he and his crew of ten men, and one passenger, were taken on board the Crescent City, and the bark was attached to the steamer to be towed to some safe harbor. Early yesterday morning, when the gale was blowing very severely, the hawsers connecting the two vessels broke, and this separated them. The Inez was then sinking, and as the commander of the Crescent City saw he could be of no more assistance, he proceeded on his way, leaving the bark struggling with the storm and the waves, which by this time have beyond all doubt engulfed her. The Inez was from Maracaibo, and had on board a valuable cargo. The Captain and crew were brought to this port in the Crescent City.

The Central Park meteorological report for last week sets forth the following facts and figures: Barometer—Mean, 30.210 inches; maximum at 9 A. M., Sept. 13, 30.384 inches; minimum at 12 M., Sept. 17, 29.994 inches; range, .388 inch. Thermometer—Mean, 69° 3'; maximum at 4 P. M., Sept. 14, 80° 5'; minimum at 7 A. M., Sept. 12, 59°; range, 28° 5'. Sept. 17—Rain from 1 A. M. to 12 P. M.; amount of water, .89 inch—total amount of water for week. Distance traveled by the wind during the week, 1,152 miles.

It is stated on good authority that Mr. ASHBURY has sold the Cambria to a wealthy English gentlemen, and on his return to England will at once turn her over to her new owner. Mr. ASHBURY intends taking a trip to Cuba and back, and then after a short stay here will return to England. It is his intention to have a new yacht built which will combine all the excellencies of the American and English styles without having the faults of either.

The following were the indications of the thermometer in the shade yesterday, at the hours mentioned, at Mr. B. BYRNE'S Mineral Water Depot, No. 189 Broadway: 6 A. M., 66°; 8 A. M., 68°; 10 A. M., 72½°; noon, 77°; 2 P. M., 79½°; 4 P. M., 78°; 6 P. M., 74°; 8 P. M., 72°; 10 P. M., 69°; 12 P. M., 66½°.

There are but two cases of yellow fever in the port: these are the stewardess and boy of the Bienville. They are both in hospital at Lower Quarantine, and were yesterday reported as convalescing. No other case is known to the Quarantine doctors, who are keeping a sharp look-out.

GEORGE MYERS, thirteen years of age, of No. 179 Madison-street, while playing on a raft in the North River, between Piers Nos. 34 and 35, last evening, fell overboard and was drowned. The body was recovered and taken to the Fifth Precinct Station-house for inquest.

JACOB WEINNICH, of No. 205 West Twenty-ninth-street, yesterday, firing a pistol in Thirty-ninth-street, near Eighth-avenue, the powder with which he loaded it set on fire Miss MARY SCHNEIDER, eight years of age, of No. 331 West Thirty-ninth-street. He was arrested and locked up in the Twentieth Precinct Station-house.

GEORGE DOLL, aged twelve years, of No. 644 East Fourteenth-street, last evening, fell off and under a Belt Line street-car, in Fourteenth-street, near Avenue C, and was run over and instantly killed. The body was removed to the late residence of the deceased, and the driver of the car was arrested and locked up in the Eighteenth Precinct Station-house, to await the result of the inquest.

CHRISTIAN ELER, of One Hundred and Eighth-street, fell under a car at One Hundred and Thirtieth-street and Third-avenue, yesterday, and had his right foot crushed. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

A kerosene lamp upset on a stove, yesterday, on the fourth floor of No. 33 Oliver-street, setting fire to the clothes of Mrs. MARGARET SULLIVAN, who was so severely burned that she was removed to the Park Hospital. The damage to the building and furniture was about $500.

Coroner KEENAN, yesterday, was notified that the dead body of JOHN MCCAULEY, aged sixty-four years, was found at 5 o'clock yesterday morning, lying face downward, under the stoop of premises No. 322 West Forty-first-street, with a bruise on the forehead. It is believed that death was caused by falling on his head.

The Coroner was notified of the death of Mrs. DEBRA, a Scotch woman, thirty-one years of age, of No. 137 West Thirty-third-street, yesterday. It is thought she died from the effects of intemperance.

GEORGE DONNELLY, aged twelve years, of No. 588 Third-avenue, yesterday fell from a tree in Jones' Wood, breaking his arm. He was removed to Bellevue Hospital.

Justice DOWLING, yesterday, committed to the Tombs JAMES MCCALL, charged with having assaulted THOMAS MCCONNELL, of No. 117 Mott-street, and bitten off a portion of one of his fingers.

BROOKLYN.

JOHN KELLY, of No. 77 York-street, while under the influence of liquor, yesterday morning, inflicted a dangerous wound on the head of his son, JOHN, with a marble lamp-stand. The father was arrested and the son was taken to the hospital.

About 8 o'clock last night TIMOTHY CORNELL, of No. 211 Van Brunt-street, had a quarrel with his neighbor, DENNIS CLARE, in the course of which several blows were exchanged. Just as the matter was finished, an unknown man came up and stabbed CORNELL three times in the face with a knife, inflicting dangerous wounds. The assailant escaped, and the injured man was taken into a neighboring drug-store, where his wounds were dressed.

JOHN SLATT, aged twenty-seven years, residing with his parents at No. 32 Lawrence-street, while under the influence of liquor, shot himself through the left temple, last night, with a seven-barrel revolver, inflicting a wound that will, it is believed, prove fatal. He had been drinking for several days previous.

MICHAEL RILEY was caught, last night, in the act of stealing a keg of white lead, worth $30, from the premises No. 112 Portland-avenue. He is one of the best-known sneak-thieves in Brooklyn.

RICHARD VICTONY attempted to steal a horse and wagon, last night, belonging to GEO. DUNN, of No. 976 Atlantic-avenue, but before proceeding many blocks he was captured by Officer RAYNOR, of the Fifth Precinct.

ANDREW WEGINGTON, residing in Grace-court, near Henry-street, fell down the back stair of his house, on Saturday night, and broke three of his ribs. He was taken to the Long Island College Hospital.

HERMAN SCHULT, aged twenty-six years, residing at No. 677 Henry-street, was found dead in a closet on Saturday morning. He is supposed to have died while in a fit.

LONG-ISLAND.

The Flushing and North-side Railroad propose to construct at the wharf at Whitestone, to which their road will soon extend, a spacious fire-proof depot of iron and brick. The map for the extension of the railroad was filed on Friday in the County Clerk's office.

Since the wreck of the Black Warrior disappeared off Rockaway Shoals there has been no way of marking the shoal. Mr. REEVES, member of Congress from the First District, asked that a bell-buoy be located there. Commodore JENKINS, Secretary of the Light-house Board, writes, inclosing a letter from Inspector C. S. BOGGS, stating that a bell-buoy could not be maintained in "such an exposed position."

The Baptist Church Society of Rockville Centre, a new organization formed through the exertions of the Lee-avenue Baptist Church, of Greenpoint, have contracted for a new house of worship at that village, on land given them by JOHN P. RHODES, Esq. The building will be 34 by 60, with an extension 17 by 49.

Wild pigeons have been very numerous the past ten days on the island. Dr. G. A. COOPER, of Brooklyn, shot 200 in one day, last week, at Montauk.

NEW-JERSEY.

Yesterday afternoon a very neat and handsome Methodist chapel was dedicated at Bowville, West Hoboken. Bowville is a village of 1,500 inhabitants, lying between West Hoboken and Union Hill, and already contains five churches. The building has been long needed, and, by the way in which the congregation, yesterday, subscribed the amount of indebtedness, is appreciated. The dedicatory services commenced at 3 o'clock, the room being crowded to that many could not enter. The sermon of dedication was preached by Rev. C. LARNER, pastor of St. Paul's Methodist Church, Jersey City.

HENRY BRIGGS, the lad who shot THOMAS DORAN, in West-side-avenue, Jersey City, was arrested, yesterday morning, in New-York, by Capt. PEIRCE, of the Fourth (Jersey City) Precinct. He was taken to the Fourth Precinct Station-house, where he was committed to await examination. The party of young boys who were out shooting with BRIGGS and DORAN are unanimous in the statement that the shooting was altogether accidental, BRIGGS having raised his gun to fire upward, but having let the muzzle fall slightly as he pulled the trigger. BRIGGS had borne an excellent character and the affair is much regretted by his friends. The inquest will be held on Tuesday. The statement of Capt. PEIRCE shows that the shooting is regarded by him as having been entirely accidental. Coroner BURNS, however, tells a different story. One of the boys who witnessed the affair, reported to him that BRIGGS threatened to shoot DORAN before he fired his gun. The arrest was made in the Newsboys' Lodging-house in New-York.

Some of the denizens of River-street, Newark, partook too freely of their favorite beverages yesterday, and when the ever-present war question was brought up they waxed warm, and a general fight was only avoided by the prompt arrest of the ringleaders. Officer RAY had occasion to arrest two of them at once, when they made a desperate attempt to escape, but the officer held them fast and succeeded in taking one to the Station-house, but the other slipped his coat, leaving it in the hands of the officer and thus effected his escape.

JOSEPH EGAN, a switchman employed by the New Jersey Central Railroad Company, fell under the wheels of a locomotive, at Communipaw yesterday morning, and had his right leg crushed. He was taken to Newark, where he was placed in St. Michael's Hospital. His injuries, it is feared, will prove fatal.

The Germans of Newark met at New Turn Hall, on Plane-street, last night, and accepted the address to the people of Germany, prepared by the Executive Committee of the German War Society. The meeting was a very spirited one.
